Reed college, as we recall it, was one of the few "pure white" colleges listed by the Carnegie foundation last fall; one of those which old not make any effort to enroll star athletes.

---Further than that, Reed's original policy of non-encouragement for athletic activity is exemplified in the "invitational" game its baseball team played with Willamette here Thursday. Reed teams cannot accept any gate receipts or traveling expenses to defray the cost of their athletic participation; the boys have to finance everything themselves but they are given one day a week free from classes to engage in sports.

Well, that system has some points to recommend it over the prevailing athletic bailyhoo of the big colleges, but we prefer a happy medium. And we think the general atmosphere of colleges Seattle 7 12 which do observe a middle course Portland 12 -encouraging sports, supervising them carefully and placing the welfare of the students above material advantages to be gained by building up gigantic athletic machines-will prove that we are
