"While it is true that disease organisms do not live and develop in dirt and refuse, nevertheless cleanliness, even in the home and grounds, does bear a definite relationship to health, for the individual who has a dirty home and premises is very apt to be equally careless and slovenly about his habits of personal hygiene. Such a person is unquestionably more likely to contract communicable diseases than is the scrupulously clean individual. Then too, cleanliness promotes happiness, for it is pretty hard to be happy in a dirty home with a yard full of tin cans and flying newspapers.

"Every day should be clean up day but since so many people do not observe it, a certain period has been set aside each spring during which a determined effort Oregon State Board of Health expresses the hope that each resident of this state will take an active part in making Oregon the most beautiful and desirable place

APPEAR ON SCREEN

Those who are interested in those mysterious "Q" ships which helped win the war for the allies will want to see the moving picture of that name which is shown today for the final Salem appearance at the Grand theatre. It is offered for the benefit of the Marion chapter, veterans of foreign wars. Those who saw the picture last night praised its filming and its accurate portrayal of that unusual side of naval warfare, the contest between the "Q" ships and the German "U" boats.

combat scenes are shown. The "Q" ships were trawlers, tramps, converted schooners which were disguised to fight the submarines. When the sub appeared up went the hatches and out poked a gun. It was the "Q" ships which helped rid the seas of the menacing subs and the picture shows their story.
