

17 NOMINEES NOW ON LIST

Membership in Secret Frats
One Reason For Action
By Principal

Alleged membership in secret societies and insufficient studying are responsible for scratching 17 names of original nominees from the ballot for high school student body officers for 1930-31, Fred Wolf, principal, said yesterday after the revised list had been posted. Wolf said in three or four instances, low grades were behind his action.

Names which no longer appear on the ballot, and officers for which these students had been nominated are:

Lorne Kitchen, president; Robert King, Clarion annual manager; Jean Eastridge, Clarion newspaper editor; William Delsell and Kimball Page, newspaper manager; Lawrence Blaisdell and Truxton Foreman, sergeant-at-arms; Sam Harbison and Carl Collins, yell leader; Myra Belt, song leader; John Bone, Raymond Rolow and Howard Adams, athletic manager; Fred Hagemann, Lynn Heise, Werner Brown and Joe Darby, forensic manager.

When platform speeches are made at the home room period this noon, no candidates will appear for two offices, those of Clarion newspaper editor and sergeant-at-arms, as the secret society issue and low grades wiped the slate clean for these jobs.

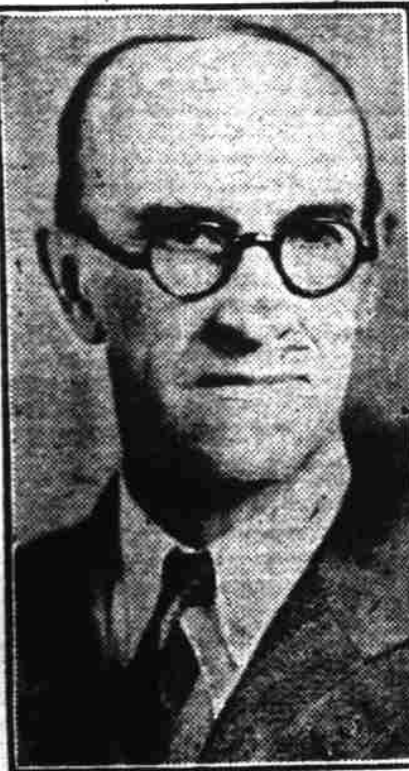

Eleven new names, placed by petition, now appear on the ballot. They are: Louis Minturn, Earl Carlin, Duane Demaris, Howard Mills, Madolyn McKillop, Marguerite Harvey, Jeanne Lunsford, Mark Satchler, Ernest Garbarino, Ward Horn and Eldon Olson.

The complete list of students scheduled to give pre-election speeches today follows:

For president, Irving Hale, Milton James, Ronald Hudkins, William Mosher, Harold Pruitt and Louis Minturn; for vice-president, Hattie Ramp; for secretary, Eleanor Henderson; for Clarion annual editor, Ruth Chapman; for Clarion annual manager, Ray Rhoden and Earl Carlin; for Clarion newspaper manager, Manakas Selander; for yell leader, Bob Carpenter, Fred Wolfe, Howard Mills and Duane Demaris; for song leader, Kathleen Phelps, Madolyn McKillop, Marguerite Harvey, Jeanne Lunsford; for athletic manager, Wilson Sigmund, Mark Satchler and Ernest Garbarino; for forensic manager, Ward Horn and Eldon Olson.

Mr. Wolf made no statement concerning the depositions his efforts to weed out secret societies made in the nomination list, save to add that three or four of the names were off on account of low grades and that it was his business to enforce the school law in the matter, despite the fact that enforcement takes off some of the best students for the school positions.

ed just some criticism already voiced because he permits the alleged secret society members whom he took off the ballot to continue attending school, Wolf replied: "It's just like the prohibition law; if it were enforced, there'd be no whiskey." The school law on secret societies enforced to the limit, would drop members from school.

FOULKES SPEAKER AT AD CLUB MEET

Just as sculptor molds clay into almost a living being and as the artist gives tone, color and vividness to his canvass so can a master printer give expression to words through the use of "cold type."

David B. Foulkes, for 44 years a member of the mechanical staff of the Morning Oregonian and for many years its mechanical superintendent, brought this message to the Salem Advertising club Thursday noon.

Foulkes declared that typography was a comparatively recent art, especially as applied to newspapers. He recalled early days in Portland when advertisements were seldom more than one column in width and when a wide variety of type was considered essential in each display advertisement.

Now proper arrangement of "families" of type as well as care in grouping of important lines and in the use of "white space" have given a new meaning to "cold type," the speaker declared. He said national advertising had forced local advertisers to give attention to the best methods now in vogue.

Foulkes gave point to many remarks by a wide range of photographed illustrations of good and bad typography.
