BUSINESS IN EAST POOR, LINN AVERS

Deplorable business conditions in the large eastern cities are reported by James R. Linn, Salem hotel man, who has just returned from an extended trip east in the interests of hop contracts, graft, bootlegging and gang rackets are rife in many of the larger cities, he says.

Factories in many cities have been closed, and in one automobile plant visited the working force and salaries had been reduced nearly one-half, he was told. In most cases, according to Linn, prohibition is given as the cause for the conditions.

Gangster warfare is more prevalent in Detroit in proportion to its population than in Chicago, and the citizens are in constant fear of the organized criminal rackets, he found. The average business man in the eastern cities where the conditions are at their worst blame prohibition, and declare that the bootlegger and gangster reap the profits. "In Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee, South Bend, Philadelphia and Detroit general conditions were about the same," he says. "In most of the cities mentioned the gangster problem of approaching that in Chicago with gang murders a constant dread."

It was mentioned that the east end of the Santiam road in central Oregon was extended to Suttle lake in order to open that territory for recreational purposes. This having been accomplished, a majority of the commission considered the work to have proceeded far enough for the present, explaining further, however, that more people would be served by pushing the road eastward from the present terminus in Linn county.

One of the forest officials said the forest service would like to see the road carried to the summit from the east side, as a measure of fire protection, and he was then asked if the heavy forests in Linn county did not require protection also.

Forest service representatives stated in reply to direct questions that they were not taking sides in the controversy, and he said the North and South Santiam roads, but that they believed the road could be built on the east end to the point where the two roads ultimately must join. The North Santiam route is not on the state highway map, but is on the forest service road system.

The forest department is now spending $55,000 on the east end to Suttle lake.

MRS. NEWCOMB IS VISITOR IN SALEM

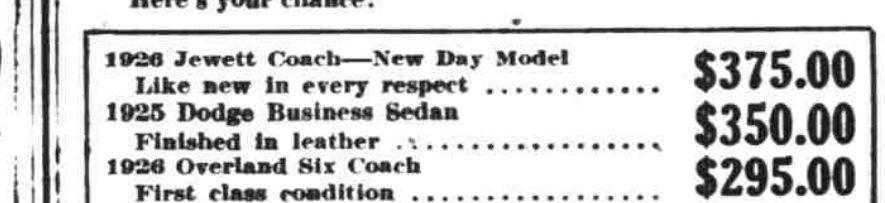

A former Salem girl and one who has made a record in a field in which she is said to be the only woman, Mrs. Beatrice Crawford Newcomb, is visiting friends and relatives in Salem and Portland for a short time. Mrs. Newcomb is director of the only woman's department of any farmers' cooperative association in the country and is associated editor of the Dairyman's League News.

She is in the west from New York City, where she went by automobile last fall because she saw a future in the dairy association work. Mrs. Newcomb was born and reared on a farm in this county, later attending the Salem high school and Oregon State college. The association for which she works, has a membership of 42,000 persons, and is the largest dairy organization in the world.

She will start the return trip the latter part of this month, as she plans to be in New York on June 15.
