Each family provided a basket lunch which was spread on long tables under the spreading branches of the huge old trees on the lawn. Rains Improve Crop Prospects In Baker County

BAKER, Ore., June 14.—(AP)—Recent rains have increased the prospects for average yields in all the major crops of Baker county, Roger Morse, county agricultural agent, announced. Because of the shortage of snow in the mountains farmers in this vicinity expected light yields because of the lack of water. Less wheat and more barley and oats were planted this year than in 1929, principally because of the low price of wheat. Baker county also has a larger acreage of alfalfa this year. The acreage of potatoes averages about the same as last year with a normal planting of seed. The seed potato situation is discouraging to local growers because of the price.
