TANGLED WILL CASE IS FILED

Conflicting Instruments Filed Result in Suit Among Heirs Named

The circuit court of Marion county is asked to straighten out an involved estate in which two wills have been approved for probate, in a case filed Saturday. Raymond C. Bristol brings the suit against Idna M. Bristol and 14 other defendants involved in the administration of the property of the late Mrs. Ada M. Kingsley of Silverton, whose estate has been appraised at $22,427. Conflicts in the two wills as well as ambiguities in the first will are the cause of the suit, the plaintiff declares.

In a clause in the first will, now admitted for probate in the county court, Mrs. Kingsley leaves her residuary estate, in value $10,000 to $15,000, to the First National Bank of Vermont, as a trust fund to help poor boys and girls without fathers or mothers and to assist people in need of assistance. No provision for the termination of the trust is given.

The second will conflicts with the first in the fact that two sisters, named as heirs to the proceeds from trust funds of $5000 each, are reduced to the income from trust funds of $4000 each, while nieces and nephews of Mrs. Kingsley share in a specified amount under the second will and in a residuary amount in the first will.

An oddity in the first will is a provision that one sister shall not receive any inheritance if she engages in any manufacturing enterprise apart from the work of her household.

The Henry markets, established by Henry Magnuson four years ago, won a large trade by selling for cash and appealing to thrifty buyers as stores operated with a low overhead.
The two markets which Mr. Hoffmann acquired are both located on North Commercial street, one at No. 179 and the other at No. 256. Mr. Hoffmann said Saturday he intended to follow Henry's policy.

FRIENDS APPROVE LONDON NAVY PACT

Adoption Urged Though Disappointment Expressed At Half Measures

NEWBERG, Ore., June 14.—Peace, dear to the hearts of all Quakers, was the chief topic before the 39th annual session of Oregon Yearly Meeting of Friends Friday. The subject was introduced by the annual report of Levi T. Pennington, peace superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, who reported the activities of the year and made suggestions as to the work for the coming year.

A resolution was unanimously adopted commending Herbert Hoover, president of the United States, and the American government for all efforts for peace and disarmament made during the year. The senators from Oregon, Washington and Idaho, in which states are located the members of Oregon Yearly Meeting were urged to work for the ratification of the treaty growing out of the London conference, though the resolution expressed disappointment that this conference had not gone farther toward disarmament.

Frederick B. Seinty of London yearly meeting, told briefly of his conversion to the peace attitude while a naval architect under the British government. He told of various experiences before and during the world war, and made a splendid appeal for peace not only among the nations but among individuals and classes.

The report of the peace committee was preceded by the report of Professor Chase L. Conover, head of the service work of Oregon Yearly Meeting, who also presented in outline the report of the American Friends service committee, and spoke briefly of their many-sided work in other lands as well as at home.

J. J. Handsaker of Portland, regional director of the National Council for Prevention of War, spoke earnestly and effectively of the work of that organization, to which many Friends belong.

President Levi T. Pennington, of Pacific college, and his wife, Rebecca Pennington, were granted leave of absence for religious service in the eastern part of the United States and England and Ireland. They will leave this summer and will be gone a half year, and perhaps for the entire year.

COUNTY COURT SAYS NEW BRIDGE FUTILE

Progress is being made rapidly in completing the market road out from Scotts Mills to the Crooked Finger district, the county court found this week on a tour of inspection made in company with Roadmaster Frank Johnson. One hundred yards of crushed rock is being laid daily on the new road which comprises a stretch two and two-tenths miles in length.

Examination of Jack's bridge across Butte Creek on the Silverton-Molalla road, convinced the court that this structure will not need replacing for some years to come. The examination was made at the request of the Clackamas county court. Roadmaster Johnson says one rotten place in the bridge can quite readily be repaired, in a manner sufficient to make the bridge serve for years.

The inspection party found Ed Riddon at work, preparing his gravel plant for the summer's work.

License Plates Issuance Begun At Office Here

Issuance of motor vehicle license plates for the year beginning July 1, got under way here Saturday. An amendment to the motor vehicle laws provides that these plates may be placed on cars 15 days preceding the effective license date.
