MANY CHANGES ARE PROPOSED

Interim Committee Plans For Efficiency of the Legislature

Installation of balconies in both the house of representatives and the senate chamber, provision for stenographers' rooms and other important changes which will tend to eliminate confusion and reduce the cost of the Oregon legislature, will be recommended by the interim committee appointed at the 1929 legislative session, which met in Salem Friday. The formal report of the committee will be filed prior to the opening of the 1931 legislative session.

A tentative plan submitted by W. C. Knighton, Portland architect, showed a complete rearrangement of both the senate chamber and the house, together with the estimated costs of the proposed improvements. Knighton estimated the total expense at $79,140, of which amount $46,240 would be necessary in the rearrangement of the house of representatives. The cost of rearranging the senate chamber was estimated at $32,900.

The balconies would extend around two sides and one end of both the senate chamber and house, and would provide seating for the estimated 100 members of the number now at the disposal of spectators. It was suggested that part of these seats be reserved for the families of legislators, who would be admitted by card.

Force Of Officers

Stenographers' rooms also would be provided in close proximity to both the house and senate. It was argued that this improvement would eliminate 90 chairs from the floors of the two houses and increase materially the efficiency of the stenographic branch of the legislature. Under the existing arrangement the stenographers sit with the legislators with the result that there is more or less confusion. Under the proposed new plan stenographers would remain off the floors of the house and senate unless called to take dictation or for some other purpose.

Other rooms will be provided where legislators can confer privately with lobbyists and other persons interested in the legislative activities. The plans also provide for convenient lavatories and telephones, which will make it unnecessary for the legislators to go out into the rotunda as under the present arrangement.

Limiting Visitors

Question Delayed

Mr. Knighton said that his plans would make necessary construction of a new ceiling in the house of representatives as well as the purchase and installation of new electrical fixtures. An intercommunicating telephone system would be provided for the convenience of the legislators and employees. Committee rooms would be scattered about the statehouse as during previous legislative sessions.

There was some discussion as to limiting admittance to the legislative halls by card, but no definite action was taken regarding this proposal. The desk clerks would occupy stations similar to those provided at the present time, but no one would be allowed on the floor of the two houses during the time they are in session other than the legislators, officers and the press.

No attempts will be made to reduce the number of stenographers, but it is likely that some of these will be assigned to committee work when not actually engaged in stenographic service.

Changes in the present plan of printing calendars and bills also may be made in an effort to reduce the legislative costs.
