

Five years ago Reed was seriously injured in an automobile accident when the car he was driving skidded on the old Nisqually road between Tacoma and Olympia. Last fall accidents continued to stalk young Reed, and his wife was injured when the car in which she was riding collided with a truck on the Olympic highway near McCleary.

Mark Reed, owner of some of the largest logging interests in the state and prominent political leader, was counting on Sol Reed to step into his shoes in the active management of his company.
