LITTLE GRAY-HAIRED MAN HAS HAD HIS PART AS HE KEPT SALEM WELL DRESSED

Locations Frequently Changed in Salem for John Sundin, Long-Time Tailor

By OLIVE DOAK

Have you ever wandered down past the tailor shop of John Sundin (last name pronounced Sundin) and stopped to gaze upon and admire the beautifully carved figures which rest in his show window of a water cow with a diminutive Chinese boy astride its neck? It isn't there just now, having been borrowed by a Portland man for a short while and many of the articles received by Mr. Sundin as to what happened to the "cow."

This story is not about the cow however, but about Mr. Sundin, that little gray haired man who for the past 20 years has been aiding in keeping well dressed men a part of Salem society and business.

He was born 58 years ago in a small fishing and trading center on the northern coast of Sweden. His grandfather was a tailor, as was his father, and his two uncles so it was to be expected that he should be a tailor, and a tailor he became, first in his own profession at the age of 15 and continuing for three years as an apprentice without pay.

When he was 21 years old he came to Duluth, Minnesota, and for four years he piled his trade there and then came west to Eureka, Calif., and in 1910 to Salem where he has since remained. His first location was on Court street in the old opera house building and since that time he moved 10 times—each time to go up until now he is located at the corner of Ferry and South Liberty streets, building "that won't come down."

What has been thinking as he stitched away these past many years making clothes to bring out the best in each man's appearance and make every man look

ITALY SETS FORTH IDEAS UPON UNION

ROME, July 7.—(AP)

Cooperation as members of a union but not of a unity with the absence of independence of all participants, the participation of Russia and Turkey and rejection of a combination of such a federation for security without disarmament, summed up the Italian viewpoint as expressed in three principles enunciated.

Printing of Textbooks by State Favored in Report But Advance Cost Is High

Equipment necessary for the production of textbooks for the schools of Oregon, would cost approximately $100,000, according to figures prepared here recently by members of the interim committee appointed by the 1929 legislature to conduct an investigation of the proposal. This investment would be in addition to equipment now in the state printing plant.

It was estimated that an additional fund, which would be necessary to care for all current expenses. In determining the cost of producing textbooks in Oregon the committee used a combination of the costs of production in California, where the textbooks are printed by the state. The committee found that the costs of producing textbooks varied materially in different states, and that it would be necessary to make allowance for the human element in estimating labor costs.

"In determining labor costs," said a tentative report prepared by a member of the committee, "we used a slightly higher figure than is now used in the Oregon printing plant. The latter rate is based upon a condition in the plant that makes it necessary to keep on the payroll, for a part of the time, more help than is actually required for the work in hand. This condition is due to the irregular flow of work.

"The work of printing textbooks could be so organized that it could fill in the gap between the two rates, and keep a fairly even flow of work through the plant, thus materially reducing the idle time in the plant, with a consequent reduction
