

Russian Lion and Crushin' Canuck Grapple Here Tonight

KARASICK HAS ENVIABLE REP

Conquest of Bull Montana Latest Achievement; Ernie Unimpressed

The big, roaring and often witty "Russian Lion," Al Karasick, fresh from a conquest of Bull Montana of movie fame, will invade Salem once more tonight for an attempt to humble one more local favorite grappler, namely Ernie Arthur.

The match will take place at the armory tonight, preceded by a 30-minute affair at 8:30 between Art Rolly and Sammy "Blackie" Vangler. The referee will not be announced until a few moments before the match starts. There will be ten pounds, more or less, weight advantage in Karasick's favor tonight, but Arthur says he has beaten bigger men.

"He may beat me in ten minutes but if he does, he'll know he has been in a wrestling match for ten minutes," Ernie said Tuesday, leaving the impression that it would take the Lion a good while longer to dispose of him. If at all, Ernie won't start any rough work.

"And I won't start any rough stuff, because I like to wrestle clean, but he won't find me bashful if he starts anything," Ernie added. Nothing is barred but the strangle hold, and the impression has gotten about that the match will be rough.

It will be the Karasick-Montana affair as Astoria in the second round after the movie actor had won the first fall. Karasick tried to throw Montana out of the ring as they broke a hold near the ropes; that aroused Montana's ire and he called in with fists flying. Karasick came back with a series of rabbit punches, Montana countered by throwing the Lion out through the ropes, and Karasick finally won with a flying headlock. He took the third fall with an airplane spin.

On the Sidelines

Golf is still a humbling game. All the duffers in the world can get a lot of satisfaction out of the play in the British Open championship where the class of the game assembled to match George Von Elm, one of the leading amateurs of the United States and a great player at home or abroad, took nine strokes before he holed out on one hole and George Duncan, former open champion and long a stalwart of the Scots, had two-count them—two eights on his card. As a result of these mishaps George and George were removed from the tournament by request at the end of the first 36 holes, their scores not coming within the charmed circle of the low 60-bordered at one end by 142 and the other by 153.

And in the qualifying rounds two professionals—unattached it is true but professionals nevertheless—needed more than 100 strokes each to cover the course. At the same time the game was showing in the United States that here, too, it is no respecter of persons and titles mean nothing to Old Man Par.

In the Metropolitan Open championship Phil Perkins, former Amateur champion of Great Britain, Eddie Held, Canadian Amateur champion, George Volget, who has held a score of titles, and Capt. E. F. Carter, former Irish champion, were eliminated the same day.

The third flight of the Metropolitan Amateur championship produced a match that will claim a place for itself in the annals of the game. A battle between two evenly matched contestants, Corbett E. Lee, Jr., and Joseph McGough, not only went nine extra holes but three of the extra holes was the same one.

When the players had traveled six extra holes on a very hot day without a decision they were beginning to think that the game was getting out of the class of sport into real toil, especially as the seventh hole loomed—a dog-leg affair of 550 yards leading directly away from the clubhouse a cool shower and change of clothing.

Then Lee had an idea that would solve the question. He suggested that they play the ninth, a short hole of 150 yards close to the home base. They did, but it was a half again and another half. But the third time brought a victory to Lee, which was quite all right with McGough. Although they walked a greater distance than would have been the case if they had played the seventh, they were at home when they finished.

Personalia . . . Bobby Jones puts a new golf ball in play every six holes . . . Gene Sarazen breaks out a new one every other hole and sometimes sends a fresh one whistling from every tee . . . Joe Kirkwood will not pick up a wooden tee after he has driven from it.

Jack Sharkey finds himself in the luckless plight of a number of baseball pitchers. He has a world of "stuff" but lacks control.

In his bout with Schmeling, the Boston sailor pounded the German with his right, or fast one and threw some deceptive curves in the form of left hooks, but in the pinch he could not get the ball over and gave a base on balls forcing in the winning run.

He was even wilder in his bout with Phil Scott at Miami, several punches landing in foul territory

This Fellow's Going to Go Boom

The grim looking individual applying a reverse headlock is the Russian Lion, Al Karasick, who meets our own Ernie Arthur on the mat here tonight. Against most opponents, Ernie has a way of avoiding positions such as the one in which the nameless grappler in this picture finds himself. Can he do the same with Karasick?

where only one fell on the German, but from a front row ring-side seat at each bout, the four or five punches inflicted on the Briton did not seem to do so much damage as the one which struck Schmeling down.

Schmeling's ability to "take it" was one of the big surprises of the abbreviated Milk Fund show. The German in the ring did not look like he weighed the 188 pounds shown by the boxing commission scales, but he weathered a storm of hard rights to the face and lefts to the body from his heavier opponent, and certainly could have gone on for a while if Sharkey had followed the rule "keep 'em up."

Sharkey's wild left in the fourth round probably cost him his chance to sit in the boxing hall of fame once ruled by another loquacious Bostonian, John L. Sullivan. The former Gob, however, saw many breaks in his favor before he had one called against him.

Two came in Miami. In his bout with "Young" Stribling, the first so-called battle of the Palms, he had no decided edge over the Georgian and while there was not a great deal of fighting in the affair, Stribling might easily have been given the decision, and with more initiative might have knocked Sharkey out.

And certainly Sharkey was never nearer a defeat than when he battered the fragile Scott to the canvas with a series of blows on the leg and hip.

And there was a matter of a draw with Tom Heenan at Madison Square Garden when most of the customers seemed to think the Hard Rock from Down Under should have had the decision. Once in this mix-up, Sharkey was very close to being knocked out. So perhaps, after all, in boxing as in other sports it all comes out fairly even.

CURT COMMENTS

CURTIS

Yes, we saw the Schmeling-Sharkey fight pictures. They are edifying in the extreme, but not so informative as to the much discussed fore blow. It comes so suddenly one isn't prepared to watch it carefully. However, that has all been settled long ago.

Our own impression was that Sharkey's supremacy in the earlier rounds wasn't as great as press reports indicated. He sort of patted Schmeling in the second round, but we couldn't see any signs that the big German was weakening. And the margin was scarcely noticeable in the third round and what there was of the fourth.

We watched particularly to see if Sharkey's style of shooting had anything to do with the foul, but didn't notice any bowling until the break-up. He seemed to be swinging from the sides up to then.

The big kick was the noise and confusion after Schmeling went down, and the bewilderment of the referee.

JONES' COURSE RECORD FALLS

Cuici and Cox Score 69's On Difficult Links At Interlachen

MINNEAPOLIS, July 2. — (AP) — Golf such as Interlachen had never seen before was pulled out of its narrow fairways and lively greens today when two 69's were shot in practice preliminary to the national open, which begins Thursday.

Two players who previously have been held to 75's and more walked off the 18th green with the new course record, first Henry Cuici, young pro from Stratford, Conn., and soon after Whitty Cox, Brooklyn, a product of the public links.

They bested by a single stroke the record set yesterday by Bobby Jones, defending champion, and Leo Diegel, ranking pro. Par is 72, 36 strokes for each nine, but Cuici shot the first half in 34, two under par, coming home one under. This result was obtained with only four birdies as he shot par on every other hole excepting one, one of the most consistent rounds recorded in the practices.

Cox opened with a pair of spectacular birdies after par on the first with another birdie on the sixth for a 33 on the outgoing nine. That score for the distance has been beaten only once. Cox in common with Hagen and most of the entries, ran into greater difficulties on the second nine but turned in par 36 to earn his 69.
