School Heads Ask Selves Impertinent Questions in 'Self Rating' Schedule

A county school superintendent, in order to comply with a so-called self-rating schedule suggested at the annual conference of Oregon school superintendents of county held in Salem last week, would not only have to possess rare educational qualifications, but would be compelled to guard carefully his health and appearance and sacrifice much of his time reading the works of the masters. Numerous other essentials would be necessary before the superintendent could qualify 100 per cent under the self-rating proposal.

The first classification of qualifications stresses the necessity of good health, proper exercise, and asks whether or not any member of the superintendent's family has been afflicted with tuberculosis. Under the heading of "appearance," the superintendent is asked whether he wears clean clothes of fair quality and whether he keeps his hair neatly trimmed and combed. Other pertinent questions relate to the condition of the superintendent's shoes and whether he starts the day with clean linen. A variety of clothing is declared to be essential.

Supervision Slack—One of the important committee reports considered at the convention had to do with the school supervisory law. The report was based on returns from a questionnaire sent to a large number of eastern states, where the school supervisory system has been in operation for a number of years. The report of the committee indicated that the supervisory law in Oregon virtually is inoperative for three reasons. It was pointed out by the committee that the educational board is superfluous and costs money for traveling expenses. It was contended that the superintendent should be empowered to appoint a deputy supervisor in the same way as other county officers appoint deputies in their offices.

The committee also alleged that the salary and expense account are too low to secure a competent person for the position of school supervisors. The present qualifications also were declared to be too low.

"A person to hold a position of school supervisor," read the report, "should be a graduate of a standard normal supervisory course and have taught school for at least one year or have taught school in Oregon for a period of five years. Three years of this teaching should have been in rural schools having less than eight room."

Amendments Urged—The committee recommended that the supervisory law be amended and that the county educational boards be abolished. The county school superintendents would be given authority under the proposed amendment to appoint deputy supervisors.

In case this is not possible, the committee recommended adoption of the New Jersey system, where the school supervisory department is under control of the state superintendent of public instruction. In New Jersey there are a sufficient number of high school, supervisors, rural school supervisors, music supervisors, art supervisors and health supervisors.

Numerous other equally as important committee reports were reported during the conference. C. A. Howard, state superintendent of schools, was one of the principal speakers.

Appropriation Considered to Purchase Flax

The state emergency board has been called to meet in Salem on Monday for the purpose of authorizing a deficiency appropriation of $300,000. The money is required to pay for flax which has been contracted for by the state.

Flax is now being raised at the state flax plant from all sections of the Willamette valley. The quality is said to be better than ever before, while the yield is heavier than in previous years.

The deficiency appropriation will be repaid as the flax products are sold. The state flax plant is operated in connection with the Oregon state penitentiary.

MUNICIPAL POWER HELD INEVITABLE

Eugene's Experience Told As Bearing on Salem Plan for Future

"It may be five or ten years but I predict the city of Salem will eventually be in the power business," opined Frank Jenkins, editor of the Eugene Register, here Saturday to attend a press meeting.

"Eugene first bought its water system, then started a small plant to furnish power to the water company. This beginning furnished the nucleus for extension of the service and subsequent purchase of the privately owned power company," Jenkins said.

"Management is the magic word which will determine success or failure of the municipality," said Jenkins. In Eugene, the power company is managed by a hard-headed business man characterized by Jenkins as "one who keeps his feet on the ground."

The water and light commission of five members is kept out of politics and successful business men are "drafted" for service on the board.

As a result in 1929 Eugene's utilities earned a net profit of $280,000 and had the lowest rates in the state, Jenkins said that when the recently completed hydro-electric plants was constructed that only one-half of a $2,500,000 bond issue was required, the remainder of the financing being done from earnings.

"We'll rapidly retire these bonds," said Jenkins. He said Eugene had two other cooperative ventures which had been highly successful. These are a cooperative cannery and a cooperative creamery.

Jenkins came to Oregon 20 years ago. Purchasing an interest in the Eugene Register he took a vigorous part in building the newspaper until it has become one of the best of the smaller dailies on the Pacific coast. In 1929 the Register Publishing company acquired the Roseburg News-Review.

Bits of Personal News Gleaned About Interesting People

Bend has a very good chance to be the city selected for new car shops for the Great Northern railroad, opined Frank Loggan of the eastern Oregon city when he was here Saturday. His Great Northern will eventually send its train south from Spokane through that city and Loggan feels it is the logical place to receive the shops, being about midway to the California junction of the Great Northern with the Western Pacific. Loggan, a University of Oregon man, is advertising manager of the Bend Bulletin. His wife accompanied him on his trip here.

Lars Bladine hails from Iowa, but in the summer-time he comes west to be with his son who is editor of the Telephone Register at McMinnville. The two Bladines were in the city Saturday to attend an editors' meeting. "We've had abominable weather in the middle-west this summer," said Bladine. "Crops have been cut down markedly. It will help farmers in the west. For one I think they should hold on to their wheat. I believe the market is going up. However, they shouldn't be raising wheat; they should be raising flax and crops more adapted to this section. The middle-west man with huge acreage of wheat and a machine method entirely for handling it can make good money raising wheat for one dollar a bushel."

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Rubber necklaces, originally designed for beach wear, are very popular with the young folk for town and country club wear these days.

Anticipating a crisis in the tenseness that has gripped Marion since Thursday when a frenzied mob avenged the murder of a white youth and a criminal assault upon his fiancée by lynching two negroes on the lawn of the Grant county courthouse, state militiamen patrolled the streets tonight with loaded rifles and fixed bayonets.

Meanwhile a board of inquiry, composed of state and county officials had taken steps to prosecute and convict those responsible for the deed hanging. The officials met today and prepared to bring prosecutions under state law which provides the death penalty for any one convicted of having taken an active part in a lynching.

Reports that the bodies of Thomas Shipp and Abe Smith, 19 year old negroes, who were the victims of the lynching, would be brought back from Muncie to night, contributed to some tension as the usual Saturday night crowds gathered. The bodies were taken to Muncie the morning after the hanging and were the cause of some demonstrations in that city last night and critics feared an outbreak might occur there.
