RECIPROCITY MADE DIFFICULT, CLAIM

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Aug. 27.—(AP)—Present high tariff of the United States make trade reciprocity difficult and reduces purchasing power of other countries for consumption of United States goods, declared Mario Estrada, head of the Argentine delegation at the Pan-American reciprocal trade conference, in a plea for tariff reduction.

Paul Clagstone, Washington, D. C., representing the United States chamber of commerce, defended the tariff on the ground the flexible provision made it possible to adapt duties to changing needs.

The Mexican delegation at the conference approved a resolution to be sent to the tariff commission in Washington, urging reduction of elimination of tariff rates on fresh vegetables shipped to the United States from Mexico. Dr. A. W. Morrill, representing the Mexican West Coast Vegetable association, declared the increase of rates in the last tariff bill were based on erroneous information given the commission by competitors of Mexican producers.

A Pan-American institute to arbitrate disputes between countries of the western hemisphere was proposed by Mexican delegates, for whom I. Helguera, Mexico City, member of the Mexican tariff commission, was the spokesman.

Put up
some fruit Now...
when winter comes you'll be Glad

The low price of sugar today and abundance of fine fruit make home canning profitable.

CANNED fruit belongs in the diet of young and old. And when you have a wide variety on hand you can vary your menus in a pleasing way.

The present low price of sugar and the abundance of fine fruit now in market make home canning exceedingly profitable. Even though you put up only a few jars of preserves or glasses of jelly, you will feel well repaid next winter when you "help yourself" to these home-made products.

Pickles and relishes made of tomatoes, cabbage, cucumbers and watermelon rind are also delicious and easy to make. Their spicy, tart-sweet goodness is most welcome when meats and fish are served.

Don't let this summer go by without putting up some preserves, jellies and relishes. Your family will certainly thank you and you'll save money in the bargain. A bit of sweet makes the meal complete. The Sugar Institute.

BEFORE the establishment of the rural free delivery system millions of farmers lived practically isolated from the world of affairs.

Rural mail delivery provided the farmer with an address. But an address such as Box Number 40, R. F. D. 5, is valueless as a means of directing a stranger to a farm residence, because it fails to locate the farm.

For years, leaders in government, business and agricultural circles have recognized this location problem as one of the most serious drawbacks to the continuation of prosperous and happy farm life.

Today, the farmers of America are on the threshold of a new era. Isolation—the lot of all who live on farms—will soon be a thing of the past.

Through the perfection of a system of rural locations, America's farms now will be located and reached without the usual lengthy and often confusing description of routes to be followed. This rural numbering system is known as the National Bureau System of Rural Locations.

It is the result of the efforts of a group of men who have devoted years to the study of farm problems. Government officials, business and agricultural leaders, road engineers and practical farmers co-operated in designing and perfecting this system. Almost two years were spent in its creation and testing.

To Marion and Polk Counties goes the honor of being the first section of Oregon to see the system installed and functioning.

In a few days representatives of the National Bureau of Locations and Statistics will call upon rural and suburban residents of this district to explain the advantages and use of the system and to co-operate with them in securing its installation.

The method followed in establishing the location number of any specific house is illustrated by the small detail map. It shows a house located on Road Number 112 within a block which is 2 miles east and 3 miles south of the northwest "corner" of the county. The house is exactly half-way (50-100ths) through the square. As a consequence, its individual number reads:

The group of figures representing a given location number are assembled in a metal frame which is mounted on a galvanized iron post sunk two feet in the ground at a point immediately adjacent to the roadway and at the entrance to the designated property. Posts extend a uniform height of six feet above the ground.

The figures are embossed on satin finish aluminum with a black baked enamel background. They are weather-proof and

National Bureau Location Markers

---the greatest contribution to rural advancement since the establishment of rural free mail delivery service.

Every county of the United States is divided into square mile units—just as cities are divided into blocks. These square mile units are numbered consecutively first eastward and then southward from the northwest corner of the county. Thus the relative position of any section within the county can be specified by a compound number representing its distance in miles east and south from the arbitrarily established northwest "corner" of the county. The lines bounding the square mile units coincide with the section lines established by federal or state surveys.

Each road within the county is assigned an individual number. Since the federal and state governments have already designated certain main highways by numbers, these numbers are reserved for such highways in the National Bureau's road numbering system. The remaining roads are assigned other numbers.

The exact location of homes on roads within a given square mile unit is determined by measuring the distance eastward or southward from the point where the road enters the block, allowing a house number to approximately every fifty feet. Houses situated on the south side of roads running east and west, and on the west side of roads running north and south, are assigned even numbers, the same as in the cities.

tion to the location of these markers. Thus they serve to designate a specific home and also to show the traveler whether or not he is proceeding in the right direction on the right road.

The uniformity of design, appearance and installation adhered to in this system, will make its use extremely simple—even more so than that found in most cities.

Since the success of this system depends upon the accurate location of every house in the county, it is necessary to create new maps from original surveys. This work has been completed for Marion and Polk Counties. These National Bureau maps are the most accurate obtainable.

Survey cars, such as illustrated, especially equipped with apparatus designed by National Bureau engineers, are used for road survey work. By use of these special survey cars, mapping is reduced to an almost mechanical basis, eliminating practically all possibility of error. Every linear foot of every road in the entire county is thus mapped by surveyors.

To make the system of even greater utility a directory, listing all persons residing within the county, outside the limits of incorporated towns, together with their National Bureau house numbers, is published and distributed as a part of the location system. Use of this directory, together with the special county map, will quickly locate any desired person and address.

Installation of the National Bureau System of Rural Locations in Marion and Polk Counties is, in the opinion of farmers and business men, the greatest contribution to rural advancement since the establishment of rural free delivery service.
