Music Groups bid For Salem's Favor

An interesting indication as to the progress made by Salem in the eyes of the musical world outside of Salem is the fact that many out of town music organizations have been making determined efforts to secure engagements in Salem during the winter months.

Among these organizations has been the Seattle symphony orchestra led by Krueger; the Portland symphony, led by Van Hoogstraten; the Cornish trio from Cornish school of art, theatre and dance; the Portland symphony quartet; and other solo artists who would be glad to come to Salem.

Perhaps no little of this interest is due to the attention that Salem has attracted nationally in the development of music week during the annual celebration of this week. National magazines have carried accounts of the detailed efforts made by Salem in carrying out the spirit of music week. Last year especially were there programs which could bear out the idea that Salem has talent and appreciation in the field of music.

For years the complaint has been that Salem was sluggish in music appreciation in general, and unloyal to its own performers. However that may be, certain it is that for the last year there has been kept appreciation and excellent support for the really good things presented on musical programs. Salem is honest in frowning on bad music and it is not slow in showing its disapproval of inferior talent.

One of the developments of last year which won prolonged applause and caused much comment following its appearance was the junior symphony developed by William Wallace Graham for one special appearance during the music week programs.

The number of performers was small, the time of practice had to be short and all told the work presented had to be a bit hasty yet it was splendidly done. There was a plea made that the group be assembled this fall and work on a junior symphony for Salem be commenced. Were this done it would be the second of its kind in Oregon; the other is in Portland.

Now work has been actively started on this splendid idea. William McGilchrist, Sr., spoke before the Rotarians Wednesday on the subject of support for this group. Names are being gathered of those interested in supporting such an organization. Plans are being made for committees to take care of the work of organization. It is suggested that only two concerts be given during the year. Children should be drawn from the studios of all teachers in Salem who instruct for symphony instruction.

While no one has been definitely approached to take the directorship, William Wallace Graham has been suggested for the place in as much as he had such excellent results last spring and under such trying circumstances.

With a junior symphony accomplished for Salem, with the Susie Fennell Pipes chamber music quartet giving three concerts, and with the Salem MacDowell club, the Madrigal club, the Men's civic chorus, the Schuberts, the Salem Choral society, and a grand program by the President's Own band from Washington, D. C., giving one concert in October it would appear that music will be coming close to its own place for this winter. There will be other concerts not yet ready to announce which will add still more to the charm of the music program for the winter.

SUMMER IN ALASKA VERY INTERESTING

AURORA, Sept. 11 — Roland Wurster who sailed for Seward, Alaska last spring, returned on the S. S. Ukon Saturday, August 3. While in Alaska Roland went as far north as Fairbanks where he visited the gold fields. He was employed in the construction of a railroad being built by the Dept. of the Interior.

His friend Reed White of Hubbard, remained in Alaska where he will teach the 7 and 8 grades in the Seward school.

Roland found the climate at Seward much the same as our Oregon winters, with the exception of May, June and a part of July when the sun shines and it is daylight 18 or 2 hours, and the rest of the 24 hours it is twilight. Before going north Roland taught in the Aurora school after which he graduated at Monmouth.
