SCHOOL ROOMS BRIGHTENED UP

It'll be Pleasure to go to Grant Building; New Schemes Tested

Shades of all the old drab school rooms that ever were! They ought to flop down and hide their faces in melancholy when they hear of the bright rooms that will greet children who attend Grant school this fall. For out at Grant school—which heretofore even teachers have made excuses for because the building was so old and the rooms on the borderline of dinginess—strange things have happened this summer. All as a result of which is a safe bet boys and girls who go there will make prideful boasts to attendants at the other buildings.

It's like this: The interior just had to be painted and the suggestion of the city superintendent, George Hug, the scheduling of the work was made. The school board agreed that Hug might try out an innovation in school room painting at Grant.

So some bright and lively colorful paint was ordered instead of the white or cream or gray or whatever it is that usually helps make a school room clean but dull. And presto, two tones and gay combinations have turned the old Grant school into a building full of life and vivaciousness. A straw tone is the predominant color for the woodwork, and for the plaster walls above the woodwork, a sea green has been used. The ceiling is white.

Every inch of space has been so treated on the second floor. On the first floor all halls, closets, and two rooms have been painted in this manner.

In the other two classrooms, even gayer color has been used, for all sand tables, long study tables and chairs have been painted in shades of greens and oranges, and carrying out the touch of bright orange, an ornament the length of each window has been given this tint.

The cement steps to the main hall have been painted and the basement has also been touched up, most of the work there being done in white enamel.

Mrs. Roy Keene, member of the school board, assisted with selection of the color schemes, as did also Miss Carlotta Crowley, elementary supervisor, and eventually she declared the scheme to be due to climatic conditions.

With that report, the investigation was dropped as the final word had apparently been said. Van Trump points out that while the Fairfield berry patch is the Oregon State college experiment station, both these men passed on the sample and declaration that the samples showed no presence of the California disease, and eventually she declared the disease to be due to climatic conditions.

No Report From Woodburn in 1929

With that report, the investigation was dropped as the final word had apparently been said. Van Trump points out that while the Fairfield berry patch is the Oregon State college experiment station, both these men passed on the sample and declaration that the samples showed no presence of the California disease, and eventually she declared the disease to be due to climatic conditions.

Last year the disease took about 12 rows of berries in the Miller patch; this year it took almost the entire crop.

Van Trump says the disease may be readily controlled. Old wood should be cut out this year, and the new growth sprayed with lime sulphur solution. Control is all the more easy because the mite makes an annual migration from summer to winter quarters, he says.

Financial settlement made out of court brings to an end defendant's complaint to renew litigation in the divorce suit of Laban A. Steeves vs. Martha Jane Steeves. Based on written and oral application of the defendant, Judge L. H. McMahan yesterday signed order dismissing.

Responsibility for Berry Disease Loss Denied By Inspector

Woodburn berry growers who are charging that County Fruit Inspector S. H. Van Trump is largely responsible for loss of large part of the crop this year through the red berry disease are barking up the wrong tree, says Van Trump.

Van Trump says that he is sure the disease was in some of the Woodburn patches last year, or it would not have appeared over such a wide area this year.

He reports that the late M. Miller at Fairfield reported a mite condition just about a year ago, and that he, Van Trump, immediately visited the patches and sent samples for analysis to H. P. Barns and another man, both of the Oregon State college experiment station.

With that report, the investigation was dropped as the final word had apparently been said. Van Trump points out that while the Fairfield berry patch is the Oregon State college experiment station, both these men passed on the sample and declaration that the samples showed no presence of the California disease, and eventually she declared the disease to be due to climatic conditions.

Well Known Local Men To Conduct Mortuary; Will Remodel Building

Dr. L. E. Barrick, well known Salem dentist, has sold his practice to Dr. A. D. Woodmansee of Eugene, and will henceforth be engaged in the mortuary business here, it was announced yesterday following reorganization of the Clough-Taylor funeral directors.

Personnel of the new company includes: L. E. Barrick, president; A. M. Clough, vice president; and V. T. Golden, secretary-treasurer.

The new group contemplates a few minor changes in the interior of the building, at the corner of Ferry and Church street. One important improvement, provision of a strictly private family entrance, has already been made.

The Heart-throbbing Story of a Girl Who Broke Chains of Convention to Win the Man She Loved from Another

GIRL UNAFRAID

By Gladys Johnson

In this gripping drama of the love game played by two young moderns with the dice loaded against them, this master author of love stories reaches a new peak of popular appeal that will thrill her admirers even more than her previous novels.

The heroine is a business girl, a glowing and vital creature who outwits society's darlings and wins the prize catch of a snob-ridden town.

This is the first publication of this great story: it will not appear in book form until later. Follow it daily in this newspaper.
