Twenty Five Years as Organist At First Methodist Church are Recalled by T. S. Roberts Today

Affliction of Blindness Balanced by Great Appreciation of Life's Enjoyments

By OLIVE M. DOAK

Yes sir, a Welshman, that's what he is, or rather that is what he was; born way over in Carnarvon, Wales, a "certain number" of years ago, but today he is an American, an organist of note, a charter member of the Kiwanis club, a truly interesting man to know, and he is "Tommy" Roberts, officially known as Prof. T. S. Roberts of Salem.

Prof. Roberts lived in Wales two years and then came to Canada with his parents. When he was four years old a serious accident happened to his eyes and his sight began slowly to weaken. By the time the little lad had become a little boy his sight had completely gone in spite of all that could be done through specialists and science.

But while Prof. Roberts, Tommy then, had been growing up to nine years old he had been studying and could read, and as he says now, "As soon as I could read I began to read, and I read images of things as they really are. I can see everything," smiled Prof. Roberts, "well, no, there is one thing I can't see, and that is an airplane. I have never had an opportunity to examine one yet but some day I will see that, too."

For a time after becoming blind Prof. Roberts attended the small public school in the little mining town in which his parents lived in Canada. A little chum read aloud to him in the back of the school room and then he recited with the classes, but soon it was found that more particular work was necessary and so the Roberts family moved to Philadelphia where young T. S. was enrolled in the Overbrook school for the blind, where when he was about 14 years old, here he completed his school work, including graduation from liberal arts. All the time he was taking music, much of the time piano with Adam Gebel.

Upon graduation from liberal arts Prof. Roberts took up music, both piano and organ, with D. D. Wood, noted teacher of the east. Just as he was completing his music degree, G. W. Jones, superintendent of the Salem school for the blind, telegraphed the Overbrook school for an instructor in music, and Prof. Roberts was recommended out of the class.

In the spring of 1904, Prof. Roberts arrived in Salem and took charge of the music at the state school for the blind. A young lady from Kansas City came to teach in the school in the fall of 1904. In 1918 that lady became Mrs. T. S. Roberts. Prof. Roberts took charge of the organ and piano department of Willamette university in 1905. Later he established his own studio and retained only his work as head of the organ department in Willamette.

In 1905 the First Methodist church installed a pipe organ. Prof. Roberts wanted to become organist for the church. The officials in charge of hiring the organist could not be convinced.

Soft shell—Fancy 23c; large 25c; standard 19c.

Mayettes—Fancy 23c; large 27c, delivered in 5 pound bags.

Meats—Light amber halves 50c; halves and pieces 45c.

Crop prospects are reported short in most districts. Sales have been heavy with an early sell out expected.

Labor Supply in Big Excess Over Demand Locally

Demand and supply of male labor in Salem the past week ran about three to one, with the big end on the supply. Only 39 men were sent to jobs through the United States employment service here, according to weekly report of Sim Phillips, director. There were 142 registrations for jobs. Thirty-nine men were referred to positions, there being only that number of calls for help. Seventy-five of those registering were common laborers, who secured 23 of the 39 positions. Twenty-five woods laborers wanted work, three of these being cannery workers and one a housekeeper. There were nine calls for female help, including six for cannery workers.

Keck is Settled At Yale; Pleased At W. U. Success

"My work is quite heavy, and at times seems a bit monotonous, but there are so many new, interesting things to see in odd moments that I am expecting the year to pass quickly," writes Wendell M. Keck, Willamette '30, to local friends. Keck is now a post graduate student in English at Yale university, New Haven, Conn.

Keck writes that he has recently heard of Willamette's success in the endowment campaign which he terms "good news to me and to the other Willamette alumni here at Yale."

Keck plans to secure a Doctor of Philosophy degree and to make university teaching his profession.
