SEES NEED OF COUNTY AGENT

Woodburn Grange Lecturer Asserts Problems of Agriculture Many

Heartily endorsement for a county agent was made this week by Mrs. Flora Larson, lecturer of Woodburn grange, when asked by The Statesman if a "county agent in Marion county could assist farmers in doing a more scientific, valuable job."

"The farmer labors from 10 to 16 hours a day trying to make an honest living by tilling the soil," writes Mrs. Larson. "His worst enemies are weed pests, rodents, insects and diseases of livestock and plant life. All these threaten to destroy the labors of his hand and yet the farmer is too busy to find a cure for all these evils."

"Therefore the grange at Woodburn believes that the proper county agent for Marion county would assist the farmer in combating all farm evils. There are different soils, the agent would analyze. He would help us grow better crops. Marion county with its rich black soil is threatened by pests of every description."

Mrs. Larson concluded her statement as follows: "The farmer that made good and retired with old age and did not have all the present evils to contend with that we have in this day—let him ponder awhile before he objects to this movement of securing an agricultural agent for Marion county."

bered for his "The Love Nest" and "The Road to Rome." This play, written in Mr. Sherwood's witty vein, has many clever lines and amusing situations and easily adapts itself to production by amateur companies. In fact, its popularity since it has been available to amateurs has greatly exceeded even its professional New York success when the role of the king was played by the inimitable Roland Young.

The king's part will be essayed by Wesley Gordon. The important role of the queen will be taken by Miss Faye Cornutt, Miss Buena Brown will play the Princess Anne, the part in which Katherine Alexander starred in the New York production, and Laurence Brown will appear as Granton, the secretary.

Professor Herbert E. Rahe, who is directing the production of "The Queen's Husband," possesses a copy of the original director's manuscript used in the New York production, by special arrangement with Longmans, Green & Co., play brokers of New York City. In all the particulars of action and stage setting, therefore, the Theta Alpha Phi fraternity production will correspond with the play as it was produced by Messrs. Brady and Wiman.

'BOLD' CRITICISM UNDER FALSE NAME

An attack printed under false name isn't worth much consideration, Principal Fred Wolf of the high school opined yesterday upon learning of an open letter printed in the Clifton, school newspaper.

The letter, more than half a column in length, criticizes the principal for overriding the high school constitution and for touching only members holding office in attempt to clean out secret societies. The anonymous writer complains also against scratching of some secret society names from the same ballot upon which others are left. "Sullivan" writes: "To the writer it seems unfair to 'scratch' the names of those who are 'intellectually' fit to hold office—while those who are physically fit for football are not bothered..."

Willamette university students' mammoth bonfire, near their athletic field, was the cause of a number of inquiries made last night to The Statesman and to the city fire department, as to where the big fire was. The glow of the blaze looked as though it were on the outskirts of Salem, some persons said.

The fire was lighted as a starter for pep activities of the annual homecoming, which culminates, athletically speaking, in the football game with College of Puget Sound this afternoon.

Osborne was arrested ten days ago when officers found a still in his house located near Croisan creek.

The principal witness against Osborne was Harry Jensen who owned the house where the still was found. He testified that Osborne furnished money with which to buy materials and food for the two families.

Jensen testified that three batches of mash were started and approximately 25 gallons of liquor distributed.
