The program was opened by Dr. David Bennett Hill of Salem, showing a comic motion picture "School Pals."

Dr. Hill next presented scenes depicting the beauty of the Columbia highway and did also the showing of pictures from the Molalla and Pendleton Round-ups.

The club expressed its appreciation for the kindness of Dr. Hill in presenting these slides.

The Campfire Girls were much interested in the views of Camp Santia taken during the time the Campfire Girls were domiciled there.

Some local girls and their guardian were also shown in this picture.

Campfire Songs Heard

Miss Georgia Mills, who is an ardent Camp Fire leader and enthusiast, led the Campfire Girls of Wahinkieyah in group singing around their camp fire and also presented the camp fire ceremonial and announced those who received awards of merit for good work each had accomplished.

The stage was beautifully decorated in seasonal greenery with a full moon peeping through fir trees and the glowing camp fire in the foreground with the group of 12 girls and Miss Mills seated in a semi-circle.

The group was assisted by their guardian, Mrs. R.

LATEST IN MEDICAL USAGE

A portable x-ray machine, the first of its kind, made its appearance at the Radiological Society of North America convention being held here. The machine weighs 70 pounds in all and can be transported anywhere and used by adjusting it to an ordinary light socket. Its value in cases where the patient cannot be moved from home or where the patient should happen to be. The patient in the picture above is Peral O'Brien, and Dr. Lloyd Bryan.

SALEM STORES OFFER WIDE RANGE OF SELECTION

Only a few shopping days until Christmas, "is the astonishing information which confronts the Christmas shopper. What to buy, for whom, and where, are the next problems. Answers to the first two questions are determined by the amount of money in the family purse and the second by the number of one's relatives. The last question is answered by the simple statement, "at home." Attractive window displays may be seen in Salem and offer many suggestions for both ornamental and useful gifts. For the youngsters there is really nothing that will take the place of toys that "go," dolls, games, teddy bears and books. New shoes are welcomed by some children, but if the family purse can provide, nothing will be of more pleasure to children than toys.

Useful Home Articles

Older people are more practical. They take pride in their homes, garden, and clothing. A useful article for the home is always acceptable, but it is best to know what is needed or what will harmonize with the rest of the furnishings. In choosing pictures or books it is well to know the personal taste of the one for whom the gift is intended.

Clothing may be exchanged among members of a family, the uncles, aunts and cousins. Here too, care must be exercised if the gift is to be of use. Books, candy and flowers have for many years been stamped as the proper gifts for one's girl or boy friends yet it is a common practice of exchanging more expensive gifts, even though this practice is frowned upon by the best etiquette books.

Something Different

In selecting gifts, attempt to find something different. A practical housewife will find a fine electrical iron quite to her liking. Nevertheless one may ponder on whether or not she will get the thrill out of it that a box of red roses will bring. Give her the iron for a New Year's gift and send her the flowers for Christmas, especially if it has been years since she has received such a gift.

A Real Problem

Cheap, fragile toys don't last long, but for the family who can afford no other gifts for the children the demand justifies their manufacture. Children who have few toys sometimes cherish an inexpensive article with the same joy that a more expensive gift brings to the child of wealthy parents.

Growing boys and girls are a real problem. They have outgrown toys and are demanding more expensive articles. Bicycles, roller skates, footballs, beads, toilet articles, books and special articles of clothing such as skating caps, wool gloves, gay sweaters and new boots seem to fill the need.
