

Fuente and Mars Fight Fast Draw Before Small Crowd

SPEEDY BOXING SHOWN BY PAIR

Bobby Ambrose and Villa in Draw Bout Also; Buddy Beats his man

Angelo Fuente of San Francisco and Bobby Mars, Filipino boy of Portland, showed the meagre crowd of fight fans some of the cleverest boxing seen here in a long while when the two featherweight glove throwers went 10 rounds to a draw at the armory Wednesday night.

The first round opened with both boys showing plenty of speed and ability to shoot hard punches from any angle. A few good blows were landed from both quarters and the round was about even. Mars opened the second with a terrific body blow which was well placed and came so suddenly that no chance was left for a dodge. Fuente had the advantage at inflicting due to his extra height, but Mars wormed around to land some clever blows at close quarters and managed to keep his chin out of the firing line. Mars held the edge in the second and also in the third when he put some well-timed blows to the head and body of Fuente.

Mars continued his hit and dodge battle and worked for close quarters and managed to keep his chin out of the firing line. Mars held the edge in the second and also in the third when he put some well-timed blows to the head and body of Fuente.

Mars was the speedier and shifter fighter and could hit from any angle, though Fuente was solid and able to withstand plenty of mauling. Most of the Salem fans were favorably impressed with the style of boxing which was displayed, though a few were clamoring for a mauling match.

Ambrose Gets Draw With Pancho Villa
Pancho Villa, the finest boxer in many a day, made Bobby Ambrose, his much heavier opponent, look foolish most of the time in the six-round semi-windup. However, Ambrose was pressed into service in place of Wattenberger late in the evening and was unprepared to fight. Villa dodged and weaved about, always letting the punches pass his head by inches, and then slammed in well-directed blows at will. It was called a draw.

Buddy Ambrose took a four-round match from Johnny Snell of Portland by a decision. Ambrose worked for openings and when they came he capitalized on them and shot his one-two and a hook at Snell frequently. Buddy rocked the Portland boy in the second and outpointed him throughout. Snell went best in the third when he put short, telling blows to Buddy's head and body.

Lorne Watts stopped too many appreciative swings by Young Freddy Welch of Portland in a four-round special, and the Portland boy got the decision. In the regular raise, Al Smith and Roy Reynolds, both Salem boys, fought a fierce, hard battle to a popular draw.

Smith gained for a knockout in the first round and knocked his man down for the count of nine twice in that period. Again in the second round Smith dropped his man, who, however, came back and stuck it out to knock Smith down for the count of nine in the fourth. Smith took away two swelling eyes.

Puget Sounders Beat Lewiston

LEWISTON, Ida., Feb. 18—(AP)—Led by Kenrick, forward, who scored more than half his team's total points, the College of Puget Sound came from behind and defeated the Lewiston Normal school basketball team 48 to 21, here tonight.

TWO JAWS THAT ACHED AS ONE

"Two minds with but a single thought" and when both tried to put the idea into effect simultaneously, look what happened. These two boys were trading punches toe to toe in the amateur tourney at Detroit, Mich., when each saw an opening for a K. O. Both swung and landed with the result shown above. The referee was rescued from the well-known horns of a dilemma by both rising at the count of nine. Ernie Mauer (left) won the decision over Mike Bruzin but was forced to retire from the tourney through breaking a thumb during the bout.

Changes in Ball Expected To Restore Normalcy in Great National Pastime

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 18.—(AP)—Baseball, like nearly everything else in sport and business and life in general, is seeking the normal level again after having been, in effect, on a good old-fashioned spree, in the opinion of the national league's chief executive, John Arnold Heydler.

So far as the national game is concerned, Heydler believes, the adoption of a less lively ball for the 1931 season will have a very wholesome effect in bringing back play to normal, with a better balance of power so far as the pitcher and batter are concerned.

"This was no sudden and hasty decision on our part," he explained to the Associated Press today. "A good many of our club owners have felt for a long time the ball was too fast, that pitchers were handicapped and the long hitters making a joke out of the home run.

"We considered many suggestions but finally adopted the heavier cover and coarser stitching, as a means of making the ball slightly heavier and enabling the pitcher to get a better grip on it, thereby increasing the chances of his effectiveness and control.

"I think the chances will do much to restore the more scientific features of the game without at the same time handicapping any of the really great long slingers such as Ruth, Klein and Wilson. Those fellows will knock the ball out of the park any time they connect.

"The main difference as I see it is that the batsmen now will have fewer good or grove balls to hit and the pitcher's confidence will be increased.

"Meanwhile we look forward to an even greater season than last year when National league attendance records again were broken."

The league's president, with Mrs. Heydler, plans to spend a vacation in Miami before visiting some of the Florida training camps.

Hammond, national field secretary, who outlined the program of work of the organization and sought support for it. He reviewed accomplishments in the conservation of wild life and scenic beauties. William F. Briezke, head of the local body, presided.

Senator Miller of Grants Pass urged the national organization to take up the matter of a wild bird sanctuary at Mather lake; also to abolish off-shore trolling in ocean waters, condemning it as very injurious to the young fish.

J. E. Cullison, chairman of the state game commission, reported there was good prospect of a compromise with the federal government over the pending suit on the title to the Mather lake beds.

CLAIM GRAND JURY MEETS ILLEGALLY

Whether the long session of the grand jury has come to a sudden end was a matter on which District Attorney John Carson and Circuit Judge L. H. McMahan did not agree yesterday. The district attorney informed the judge, during the course of a case that McMahan was hearing, that no order had been drawn continuing the grand jury of the January term over to the February term.

McMahan said he thought the order continuing the jury had been drawn, but Carson said not. The judge ordered the order to be drawn as of February 7, to which Carson raised objections. The matter was being looked up yesterday.

If it is found the jury can not be continued, considerable of its work will have to be done over by another jury.

INCREASED SALES BY UTILITY NOTED

Pacific Northwest Public Service company, operating electricity and gas properties in this territory and a major subsidiary of the Central Public Service corporation, reports an increase of 2.55 per cent in gas sales in 1930 over the preceding year.

Electricity sales of Pacific Northwest, amounting to 421,597,617 kilowatt hours were less than one-half of one cent below the 1929 sales of 423,305,619 kilowatt hours.

According to Albert E. Pierce, president of the Central Public Service system, increased gas sales last year reflected success of the operating units in building up domestic consumption to offset lessened use by industrial plants.

"In view of the outlook for generally better business during 1931, increased industrial consumption, combined with the steady improvement being experienced in domestic usage, should add substantially to our gas volume this year and bring a corresponding improvement in electricity sales which in 1930 for our whole system were slightly smaller than in 1929," Mr. Pierce states.

In 'Holdout Limelight

By HARDIN BURNLEY

WINTER always brings players' salary woes to worry baseball magnates, and 1930-31 is no exception to the rule. He had secured considerable, and his vaudeville earnings went into successful business investments. Donlin had nothing except his feelings hurt, but the fans did miss him for several seasons. This may have hurt at the gate, but the Giants probably believe the Donlin incident helped their treasury in the long run, because it furnished a grim example for others bent on payroll drives. Were that colorful Giant star playing in this generation, he'd be justified by the fans if he held out for at least $25,000 a season.

Yeast baked by and the Giants team faced another interesting holdout problem when Eddie Roush, veteran center fielder, balked at a $7,000 salary cut after a three-year contract for $22,000 per had expired. Eddie had been slipping in 1928 and 1929. He refused to play for $15,000, retired to his Indiana farm, and it looks as though that ended his diamond career.

While some holdouts do that act for publicity purposes, most of them are sincere in seeking a better share of the magnates' profits. Seldom do they get the best of the wily box-office experts. Benny Meyer once did in springing a raise out of Brooklyn. He wrote his ultimatum on an imaginary cattle company's embossed stationery, "Charley" Ebbetts visited Benny on the latter's ranch, and Meyer had to borrow all the neighbors' cattle in order to impress the Brooklyn prey that he (Benny) meant to stick to cattle "kinging" unless the boss came through. And Ebbetts did.
