Marie Dressler Film at The Capitol

"Reducing" Satire on Beauty Parlors; "Golden Dawn" Later in Week

This is what Marie Dressler says of the play, "Reducing" in which she and Polly Moran starred and which play is being shown at the Capitol beginning with today:

"As a grand satire on current life I put it in the same class with the other picture Polly and I made recently, 'Caught Short.' Where 'Caught Short' lampooned the stock market, 'Reducing' has a lot of fun with beauty parlors.

"Everyone in this world, except perhaps a few youngsters, are worrying either about losing or gaining weight. And certainly every girl over 20 is working overtime trying to keep her looks, or to create an illusion of having more beauty than Providence really gave her. Therefore, in 'Reducing' we are striking a very popular chord. People will understand us in every move we make in this picture."

The play has to do with the beauty parlor of Polly Moran and the process of reducing fat women. Marie Dressler is a sister of Polly in the play. Polly is rich and Marie is poor. Polly sends for Marie to come and help in the beauty shop and there follows screamingly funny incidents on the train as Marie gets her large family into New York, and still funnier scenes follow as Marie tries to adjust her awkwardness to the delicate operations of the beauty shop.

There is no end to the laughing while the play goes on and yet there is a bit of pathos to balance the laugh wrinkles. With Marie Dressler playing in a production one could hardly do less than want to see the play.

Following "Reducing" will be "Golden Dawn" with Vivienne Segal of "Venetian Nights" fame and Walter Woolf, Noah Beery and Alice Gentile are also in this production of the tropics and bar-bare splendor.

BREAKS LEG IN PRACTICE

WOODBURN, March 14 — Charles Cammack, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Cammack, broke his leg Thursday while taking spring football practice at Woodburn high school. He broke his leg just above the knee.

role in this picture; Joan Bennett, David Torrence, Halliwell Hobbes and others take the characters of this play.

Edmund Lowe, a featured player in "Scotland Yard", which will be seen at the Grand Friday.

"Moby Dick" Classic now At Grand

Joan Bennett has Lead for Melville Story; "One Romantic Night" Next

The famous American classic, "Moby Dick" written by Herman Melville, will be the subject of the picture to be shown at the Grand today and in it John Barrymore will take the lead and with him will play the picturesque Joan Bennett.

The story is one of love, misunderstanding, intrigue and a queer superstition of the sea. There is wonderful photography in this picture and there is a realism which almost overpowers one at times. John Barrymore's voice and Joan Bennett's looks are splendid contributions to the picture and the story.

Wednesday night a royal romance will be developed at the Grand under the name of "One Romantic Night" with Rod LaRoque, Lillian Gish, Conrad Nagel, Marie Dressler, O. P. Heggie and others developing the plot as a group of interesting characters.

The play is a delightful development of a love story in which most everyone but the audience gets fooled.

Mary Pickford's plan to enter the cosmetic business is rivaled by Gloria Swanson's proposed dressmaking and perfume establishment in Paris. Following the completion of "Obey That Impulse," Gloria will go to Europe to make preparations for the venture. Later, if her attempt is successful, she will open a Hollywood branch. . . . Adela Rogers Hyland is out of the hospital and will be back at work in two weeks. . . . Frances Lee, film ingenue, and Harry Barris, one of Paul Whiteman's former "Rhythm Boys," are concentrating on each other. . . . Dixie Lee, boon companion of Frances, already is married to "Bing" Crosby, another of the popular trio. . . . The fellow who thought violet ray was a movie actress wasn't so dumb after all. A Hollywood extra girl has the name. . . . The new general manager at Pathé is Fred Lalley, brother-in-law of the retiring C. E. Sullivan. . . . The Los Angeles theatre, newest local cinema palace, has a restaurant, shoe-shine stand, ballroom, etc. C. Graham Baker observes if they only had rooms upstairs, you could live there all your life.

GRETA GARBO

Here is a new Greta Garbo and you will see her in this role in "Inspiration" at Warner Brothers' Elsinore today.

Just why the fears on the part of Marie Dressler and Polly Moran is a riddle that will have to be solved by seeing "Reducing" which is the current picture at the Capitol.

Lewis Stone, Marjorie Rambeau, Judith Bossell, Beryl Mercer, John Miljan and many more take this play quite out of the women.

ordinary run of plays, even if it were not for Miss Garbo's appearance.

It is the story of a great love, and a dramatic love; a story, the development of which gives Miss Garbo a chance to interpret the dramatic depths of her own did power of characterization and feeling.
