KIWANIS HEARS GUIDANCE TALK

Fetish for Education has Its bad Sides, Claim Of O. R. Chambers

"Just now we have a fetish for a college education. We teach our students in high school that they must go on for more education. The teaching is wrong and hurtful. Everyone cannot have a white collar job and it is wrong to make young people feel they have to have a white collar job."

So believes Dr. O. R. Chambers, Oregon State college professor, who spoke on vocational guidance to the Kiwanis club here Tuesday noon.

Chambers declared that the task of the vocational guidance worker was first, to determine the abilities of the student, and second, to present a fair picture of the different occupations in which he could use those abilities.

Chambers declared that the task of the vocational guidance worker was first, to determine the abilities of the student, and second, to present a fair picture of the different occupations in which he could use those abilities.

Chambers criticized intelligence tests as first developed. "We perfected tests in which the teacher could do well. We forgot that there are other kinds of excellence besides scholastic excellence."

The speaker urged Kiwanians in their vocational guidance work to have young people give careful consideration to the field with which the youngster was most familiar. "Selling a boy to your work when he isn't cut out for it leads only to heart-breaks and failure."

Fred Wolf, principal of Salem high school, introduced Chambers, explaining that vocational guidance was one of the objectives of Kiwanis and announcing a night meeting to be held soon, at which Kiwanians would hear more concerning the club's program of guidance.

Mrs. Martha Floor sang two numbers which were greatly enjoyed by the members, and as an encore, she gave "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." She was accompanied by Mrs. H. A. Pedersen.

RELIC OF PIONEER TIMES PRESENTED

Lamp That Came Ocean Route Will be Placed In W. U. Museum

An oddity and a relic was presented to Willamette university Tuesday by Rev. D. Leslie Fields, an alumnus of the local college, in the form of an old wall lamp. Rev. Fields is a graduate of both Willamette university and Kimball school of theology. He addressed the present students in chapel, Tuesday.

Stamped on the bracket are the words, "Cornelius & Co. Phila. Patent April 1, 1813." It was brought around the Horn years ago and put up in the old Oregon City Methodist Episcopal church which is the first church west of the Rocky mountains, according to Dr. Carl G. Doney, president of the university. Rev. Fields is pastor of the Oregon City church at the present time.

According to Dr. Doney, the lamp once burned sperm oil. A faint odor of some unfamiliar substance is present in the large reservoir at the base of the lamp. The lamp is surmounted by a thin glass chimney. The wall bracket is as long as the lamp and chimney are high.

The metal of the lamp seems to be a thin sheet iron such as is put into roofing iron. It has a "tinny" ring when struck by other metal.

Fields Addressed Students Here
In his address to the students in Waller hall, Tuesday, Rev. Fields pointed out that the professors in an educational institution can go only so far with the students' preparation. Then they must bid the students "farewell" and let the young people climb the heights alone.

Rev. Fields attempted in his talk to show the value of a good reputation for honesty and fairness.

Anti-Evolution Repeal is Now Before Solons

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 18 (AP)—Legislators squirmed in their seats here as a bill to repeal Tennessee's anti-evolution law was announced ready for introduction and the lawmakers saw the prospect of taking a stand approving or disapproving the measure that brought on the famous Scopes trial.

Mr. Busick, Can I Ask You a Question?

Can you? Well, I'll say you can. I like to answer questions for folks—that is, I like to if I can.

Well You Can Answer This One All right

I know, because I asked the editor before I left down there and he said I'd have to ask you to find out, because he'd been puzzling over that one for a long time himself.

You Don't Mean To Tell Me

You asked the editor something he couldn't answer, did you? Well, anyway, what's the big question you want to ask me?

Well I Asked Him

how in the world you expected to make good readin' out of such poor writin'— he says you do it some way but to save him he can't figure how you do it. He says there's too many folks that turn to your ads and read 'em before they read the rest of the paper. Is that so? I said, how's he know folks do that?

I dunno, 'less it's because he does it himself. I saw him do it a coupla times and he got madder'n a wet hen both times he done it (read your ads first, I mean).
