"A Knight Comes Flying"

"I'll see you again, Mueller," was all that he said. Dinner that evening was a very strange function. Sally, with black hair glittered purple in the light from the flickering candles, was very frank and ingenuous in her delight at having a guest to break the monotony of existence in the old house. Joan, however, was as reserved as before. Although Dave could find nothing to criticize in her manner toward him, he was conscious of a vague, watchful hostility that both puzzled and interested him.

After a delicious clear soup, an aged waitress waddled into the black-and-white shadows of the high-ceilinged dining room, bearing a roast chicken, crisp, steaming and succulent. It was placed before the guest and, as he carved, he felt a distinct twinge of conscience. There could be no thought of paying for this dinner, yet such was the apparent poverty of the house and its surroundings that he was certain every penny, every ounce of food was called upon to do double duty. But if the girls were conscious of the extravagance of a roast chicken dinner, they gave no evidence.

Better Days The silver and napery were of exquisite pattern and quality although the damask tablecloth had been carefully darned and mended. The candlesticks were of ancient hammered silver, the serving platter of Sheffield plate. Tables, chairs and buffet were of heavy mahogany. The sideboard was conspicuously absent. Dave wondered idly what antique dealer had wheeled it out of the house and whether the girls had known its real value. A round mark in the ceiling over the table indicated that a crystal chandelier might have hung there. The signs of bygone affluence were at every hand, those of present poverty carefully concealed.

Dave glanced surreptitiously across the table to Sally's hands as they manipulated her knife and fork. Small, slender and artistic those hands were, yet roughened and reddened from hours of work in the sun. Joan's, too, were the hands of a gentlewoman, but no amount of painstaking care over her dressing table could obliterate the signs of man's toil with hoe and spade.

Of the two, Sally alone betrayed discontent with her present lot. There was a positive droop to the corners of her full mouth which was the result, Dave decided, of many an hour of regrets. Joan, however, bore no traces of unhappiness. Her mouth, although entirely feminine, was firm and forceful. The flyer wondered how she managed to live through the lonely days and nights, laboring through a stark present which seemed to have no future.

WHEAT AT ITS LOWEST SINCE 1925 YOUNG HENS AND DUCKS HIGHER

Exports at Dead Halt And Inspection is Serious Issue

CHICAGO, March 20.—(AP)—Lowest prices since 1895 went on record for wheat today. North American wheat exports had apparently come to a dead halt, and British millers announced that hereafter United States federal inspection certificates on wheat purchases would not be accepted. Argentine, Australian and Russian wheat exports increased heavily, and weather and crop reports in the United States and Canada gave promise of further piling up of fresh 1931 surplus supplies.

Buying resistance developed, reached new depths, and the however, after wheat prices had market closed with a rally, but irregular, 1/4-1/2 cent lower, to 1/4-1/2 cent higher than yesterday. Corn finished 1/4 off to 1/4 up, oats unchanged to 1/4 advance.

Onion Growers Hold Firm on 50-Cent Minimum

PORTLAND, March 20 (AP)—Wholesale butter and egg quotations opened unchanged today. Butter receipts continue lighter than last week but sufficient for the demand of hand to mouth character.

Egg market tone was steady with receipts slightly larger. Demand was active for quality eggs for storage.

Market for country dressed meat was steady with demand for pork strengthened at 11 to 11 1/2, 1/4 better for best quality stuff. Strictly No. 1 spring lambs was on preferred call with quotations ranging up to 25 cents a pound.

Dressed poultry market opened firm. Broiling hen and Pekin ducks were in special demand. Colored broilers, 1 1/2 pounds and over were quoted at 32c with 30c quoted on lights, 1 1/4 pounds and over. Young Pekins, 4 pounds and over were getting around 32 with 25c set on old birds.

With turkey shipping season about over and demand only ordinary, quotations ranged from 25 to 32 cents, according to grade.

In the fresh fruit and vegetable trade California asparagus prices were weakened 1 to 3 cents by arrival of a fresh carload and another car enroute, due in today. Quota: 13 to 14 cents a pound. Government Market News service reported: Western potato markets are excited, with Idaho sales advanced to $1.10 per cwt., of No. 1 russets, f.o.b., cash track, and Yakima $1.7 per ton of No. 1 netted gems. No advance has been registered in the large holdings of Willamette valley Burbanks, however. Reliable trade advices verify the 20c freight decline on Yakima potatoes moving eastward. As a result, there is considerably increased eastern inquiry. This freight-rate reduction is to be effective April 1.

Western Oregon onion growers are steadfast in their program of holding for 50c per cwt., plus bags. An occasional sale is being effected at this price, but liberal accumulation of Oregon stocks at California markets is preventing any appreciable upward reaction there.

Local spinach is more plentiful, with fine quality down to 56c per 20-lb. box. Over supplies of California spinach have resulted in fair quality in 40-lb. crates jobbing around $1.35.

Red apples are in good demand but yellow Newtowns, although of excellent quality, are moving very slowly.
