Sketches of the development of Salem and Oregon in 80 years.

Interesting facts and stories of the days of old.

Pictures of old scenes and old characters.

Eighty years have witnessed profound changes; the Lot Whitcomb, first steamboat launched in Oregon, had her trial trip reported in The Statesman. Stages, railroads, motor roads, airplanes — the swift march of mechanical progress has come about in 80 years.

To survive the vicissitudes of fortune and arrive at the octogenarian age is no small achievement. The Statesman, second oldest paper in the Northwest, has played a prominent part both in recording the events of 80 years and in leading the way in the development of the city and state.
