Loganberry IS GAINING FAVOR Growers Increase Acreage As Prices Remain Firm, Crop Prospects Good

WACONDA, May 9.—The loganberry industry is one phase of farming that seems to be recovering from the present depression. Growers in this community and others have increased their acreage this year. William McGilchrist of the McGilchrist berry farm has set out 33 acres—18,000 plants. A. W. Nusom has five acres in berries, two being set recently. Allyn Nusom will soon have completed planting two acres of loganberries. The weather has been very favorable this spring and those who set out berries report that they are growing fine. Some growers think that the reason for the unusual demand for plants this year is due to the fact that for some reason the crops did not grow. However, those plants that did take root are unusually fine. Two cents apiece and $18 per thousand was received for the plants. Fields in Fine Shape Berry fields in this community are looking fine, and from all appearances at this time, they will be a bumper crop this year. Most growers here have contracted their crops for five years for five cents.

PLACES TO SEE IN YOUR DRIVE TODAY

Today rhododendrons will be the topic of discussion and let them form the center of attention in your drive today. Just pass these rather stiff looking shrubs are covered with a heavenly arrangement of blossoms in white, pink and purple. Oregon is one of the few places where the native shrub grows. Just now every nook and cranny of certain sections of the coast mountains are bowers of the soft pink delicacy of rhododendron in bloom. These plants would hardly attract your attention without the blossom for the leaves are rather stiff and of no interest in shape, and the stalks are ungraceful. But cover them with bloom and they are like a plain person suddenly overtaken by some great happiness, a peculiar beauty even in their stiff and ungraceful form. The native rhododendrons are not to be had easily nor do they grow particularly easily. Some people have good fortune in getting them, but others share much disappointment in trying to get them to grow. A good rhododendron plant costs: just a small slip will be as much as $7.50 and choice ones even more. If you can start slips easily this is one way to have rhododendrons and yet not run the expense too high. Some people are fortunate in starting slips and if any one has a particularly successful method let the Statesman garden editor hear from you. Rhododendrons need acid soil, some shade, and leaf and moss mulch in the fall. The latter supplies the needed acid soil and gives the natural woods condition for the winter months. Perhaps the most beautiful plants to be found today are those of Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Epply at 738 North Summer street. They stand one on either side of the front porch. Mrs. Epply says, he and Mrs. Epply have counted 136 blossom clusters on them. To see them is to believe there could even be more than that. You will note that on one of the bushes there is a purple flower amidst the lovely pink.

Harris and Martin Holmes of Brooks as they wish to join a grange nearer their home recently organized at Chemawa. ## Fraser Warbles Praise of Salem

George D. Fraser, engraver, was in a kindly mood yesterday and took occasion to sing again his praises of Salem. "One trouble with our community here is that we fall to appreciate how fine it is," said Fraser. "I've been in a large number of cities, Duluth, Minneapolis, Hartford, Conn., Winnipeg, Calgary—but never did I strike a place which appeals to me like the Willamette valley and the city of Salem." Fraser said when he struck this country he felt as though "he wanted to put out his anchor and stay." "The city is beautiful, the country is fertile and the climate we have no equal. Such as many so-called localities," Fraser commented. "Newcomers to Salem or people who have been here for a few years should be interviewed by the papers and their opinions on Salem expressed. You'd find people who have lived in other places will appreciate the value of Salem."
