Direct mail advertising is versatile, flexible and permits selec-tivity Dan Wiley, sayes promotion manager of the Iron Fireman company in Portland, told Salem Ad clubbers here yester-day noon. While his company is spending $300,000 for national magazine and newspaper advertising it is supplementing this by systematic campaigns through dealers which are proving effective in increasing business, Wiley declared. He likened advertising to the program of a battle in which the barrage was laid down by newspapers and magazines, the hand to hand fighting was done by salesmen and the sharpshooting was done by direct mail.

"Anything to help the cales-man get results lowers his costs," Wiley said. "I believe in advertising because it makes sell-
