Rebekah Lodge Has Interesting Meeting

Members of the Salem Rebekah Lodge were happily entertained Monday evening by the Salem and Newberg cantons and Ladies' auxiliary.

Readings, musical numbers and a mock wedding were included in the program, which was followed by light refreshments, including the "wedding" cake. The Newberg visitors also put on a drill.

Those participating in the wedding ceremony, performed under a large wedding bell, were: Louise King, groom; Ella Smith, bride; Grace Weber, father; Ina Siegmund, mother; Rebecca Shusterwick and Alma Henderson, flower girls; Ida Tragilo and Victoria Stiffler, ring bearers; Mrs. Harris, trainbearer; Elsie Townsend, minister; Lucian Engstrom, best man; Hattie Cameron, maid of honor.

The wedding march, up an aisle formed by the cantons, was played by Lizzie Waters. Myrtle Terrill sang.

The Salem Rebekah lodge is planning to visit Triphena Rebekah lodge at Silverton tomorrow evening, July 2.

Pattern

By ANNE ADAMS
Frocks that resemble jackets are very popular, and the one shown adds a soft feminine grace to its smart jacket effect that is delightful. The back bodice is in one, but the front opens, crosses and falls on the side. It's very attractive! There are long sleeves with the pattern, but you'll love love these little capelet affairs for warm weather. The skirt flare is added well below a snug hip-line. Pattern 2154 is lovely of printed silk crepe, georgette or one of the new cottons.
Obtainable only in sizes 16, 18, 20, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32. Size 16 requires 3 3/4 yards of 39 inch fabric. Yardage for every size and simple, exact instructions are given. No dressmaking experience is necessary to make this model with our pattern.

Dr. W. H. Lytle was appointed to head the animal industry division of the new department of agriculture. He has been state veterinarian for the past 18 years; and was slated for re-appointment to the new division which includes the work he has been doing. The new department of agriculture becomes effective today.

John Schroeder, for many years clerk of the legislative ways and means committee, was a visitor at the state capitol yesterday. Another visitor was R. R. Turner of Dallas, superintendent of schools there, and also a member of the state textbook commission. Senator Charles L. McNary of Salem also visited the statehouse.

A campaign has been started around the state house to see who can raise the best mustache. Jerry Owen came here

About half of the licenses to be used had been issued Monday night. The total was 101,876. The mail receipts show a decrease, with 51,412 as compared to 60,088 last year. The counter sales at Salem and Portland were not compiled daily last year and therefore no comparisons have been made. The total money received to date for licenses was $2,026,331.

Rufus C. Helman is opposed to reduction of wages or increasing hours of labor. However the state treasurer did favor standardization of wages. Helman made this statement to representatives of labor unions yesterday. He believed that to bring prosperity back, it was necessary to maintain wage standards, as it is the wage earners who spend the money.

Representatives of labor who called at the state house yesterday were Ed J. Peikey, Seattle, of the International Typographical union; Ben T. Osborne of Portland, secretary of the state federation of labor; William F. Otto, president of the Portland printers' union and Harry Listman, Seattle, of the pressmen's union.

Nine bids were entered for the new hospital building for the state tubercular hospital at Salem. The contract is expected to be let today. The low bid was given by the Anderson construction company for $65,311. J. A. Bernardi & Son of Salem was low bidder for the heating contract at $5309.
