JOB FOR COLLEGE MEN SOUGHT HERE

Willamette Facing Increase in Enrollment, Part Time Work Needed

A move to provide jobs for Willamette university students who will enter school here next month was begun last night at the chamber of commerce rooms at a meeting of local service club leaders called by Professor William C. Jones of the university. Jones said the university faced the largest enrollment in its history but found itself unable to encourage many students to come because part-time work was not assured. A job that would provide room and board would mean that many students could come to school this winter, Jones said. He asked and received assurance from the men at the meeting that everything possible would be done to provide jobs for the incoming students before the opening of school.

It was pointed out at a meeting that no work was desired which would deprive present workers of their tasks or would keep some head of a family out of a job. Jones suggested that the best way to secure jobs would be through the creation of work in and around the homes and in local business houses. Dish-washing in restaurants, janitor service, men to keep establishments open at evenings—these were some of the types of work suggested to help fill the need of the university. Other cities of smaller size than Salem and with larger student bodies in their universities are successful in providing for the need for part time jobs, Jones said. He indicated that he would devote all of his time the next three weeks in lining up work for the students.

Under the Dome... Occurrences and Gossip at the center of Oregon's state government

At last the secret of why the state highway commission has delayed its postponed meeting, has been let out, not in its entirety, but enough so that the remainder can be guessed. And sympathy is extended to the victim—H. E. Van Duzer, chairman of the state committee, who right now does not feel like meetings.

The reason, or near reason, was let out this week when William Hanley of Burns and Charles K. Spaulding, Salem, held a conference with the governor. An attempt was made at that time to hold a meeting, but the chairman was ill at Portland and unable to attend. The meeting was therefore delayed until sometime next month.

And now for the reason. Van Duzer has had trouble with his teeth, and from scattering reports on the next meeting with a new set of gliders. Thus, through much suffering, the veteran commissioner has joined the large army of persons who have been forced to substitute ready mades for naturals.

Hanley added a further reason for delay in the highway meeting. While here this week he stated most emphatically that no highway session could be held in Salem while the Round-up was in progress at Pendleton. Knowing Bill Hanley, it is assured he is serious in this remark. Therefore no definite date has yet been announced for the next session, which will be Hanley's first attendance as an official.

It seems to be a long time between house warnings. Public Utilities Commissioner Charles M. Thomas promised such an event some time ago, and interested parties are still waiting. Of course Thomas has been busy, particularly in Portland the past few weeks, so there is an excuse. However, there is Henry Hanson who has moved into a house here.

Fred S. McCargar, secretary of the Salinas Chamber of Commerce, secretary of the California Rodeo, as well as secretary of the Rodeo Association of America, was a visitor at the state capital on route to the Pendleton roundup. Director of the Salinas rodeo each year attend the roundup to gain new ideas for the annual event in California.

The vacation season is still on around the state capital and will continue so until the middle of September. Among those absent this week were Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state, Major-General George A. White of the Oregon National Guard, Charles A. Howard, state superintendent of schools; Attorney-General I. H. Van Winkle, and Arthur Benson, clerk of the supreme court. Many other officials and employes are on vacations this month.

BURGHARDT SERVICE ATTENDED BY MANY

The community of Salem expressed its sorrow at the death of Mrs. William Burghardt, Jr., for a number of years a leader in Salem musical and cultural life, when more than 200 people paid tribute to her memory at the funeral services held Friday morning at 10 o'clock at the family residence on Union street.

Roy George Swift, rector of the St. Paul's church, read the burial services and emphasized the beautiful life which Mrs. Burghardt had lived and her faith in immortality. Her long sickness with an incurable disease, which took her life Wednesday morning, was endured with the high courage which she has shown in all her problems of life, he observed.

Many beautiful floral offerings were evidences of the high esteem which her fellow townsmen held for her. A record of classical music which Mrs. Burghardt had chosen before her death was played as a prelude to the funeral services. Miss Josephine Albert, accompanied by Miss Genevieve Thayer, sang "Sheep and Lamb," by Sidney Homer.

The remains were accompanied to Oregon City by a large cortege and many beautiful floral offerings. Interment took place in the Catholic cemetery of that city.

Palbearers were Paul Wallace, Chester Cox, Dr. Wilson McNary, Fred Thelsen, Frank Hughes and Earl Jensen.

Left-Handed Pancakes Are Demanded by Climbers, is Chemeketa Cook's Claim

The Devil's Dream and the Devil's Highway are also quite near. Deer have walked through our doorway a number of times and bears have been within our domain twice, but fortunately we have lost no bacon. "Camp Robbers" and chipmunks carry away everything they can, including about one-fourth of the oats we brought for the camp horses.

The Blue Gentians abound now and a number of other mountain flowers adorn the park. As I write, the fog appears to be lifting and it looks as if bright weather is now in store for us again. We hope so for camp breaks up the last day of this week.

We had 19 in camp during the Clifford of the Astoria "Angoras" and Bob Donaldson, Portland Mazama and Chemeketa, who were here for the weekend. Seven of our regulars left for home after the big climb Sunday.

For the most part the weather has been splendid, a few cold nights. We had to break the ice on wash basins two mornings. Sunday and Monday were very warm.

The other night I was making a "plutser" to light my tent. I was using a number 19 tomato can and the can slipped, cutting my thumb with the sharp edge. Dr. Downs, camp doctor, was called to mend the thumb. One girl asked another what was the cause of the accident and was informed that I was making a "plutser."

The girl then wanted to know what a "plutser" was and was told that the other did not know what it was but they were going to serve it for breakfast.

We are fortunate that no very serious accidents have happened. Gussie Nodurt, who stepped on a rusty nail the second day here was able to make the big climb and is now as lively as ever. Dr. J. Ray Pemberton is now serving as camp doctor, after Dr. Downs returned home.

Everyone who has come to the camp says that Indian Henry's hunting ground is the most beautiful camping spot in the park. We have a wonderful view of the mountain and are within easy hiking distance of several interesting climbs, such as Aararat, Iron, Crystal and Pyramid mountains.
