Little Girl Recovers—Patry Lindsay, four and one-half year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Lindsay, 1740 South High street, who received contusions on the head as the result of a collision between two automobiles and two bicycles at the intersection of Mission and 13th streets Sunday, has recovered from her injuries, her mother reported last night. Accident reports filed at the police station indicate that Mrs. Lindsay was driving east on Mission street while A. H. Miller, Portland, driving north on 13th street, turned east on Mission. The Miller car struck the Lindsay machine, which in turn ran between two bicycles ridden by Robert Elgin and Charles Stewart. Miller claims Mrs. Lindsay was driving 40 miles per hour and cut in front of him, hooking his car and pulling it over on its side. Young Elgin was injured about the ankle, wrist and hip.

PATIENTS' EXPENSE LAW DEEMED VALID

Statehouse Attorneys Hold No Doubt but Opinion Is Still Awaited

Legislation enacted in 1931 requiring counties to pay $20 monthly for non-violent patients in the state hospitals is constitutional without any doubt, attorneys at the statehouse said after giving the act careful consideration. The opinion, however, was not official, the law still being before the attorney general for consideration.

The question now has been raised as to how the counties are to pay for the support of these non-violent insane patients when no provision was made in the current budgets for the expenditure. The state laws provide specifically that counties shall not expend funds other than those provided in the budgets and approved by the county courts. As far as can be determined, neither the county laws make provision in their 1931 budgets to pay the state for the support of the insane.

As a result of the uncertain situation the Marion county court has instructed the district attorney to confer with Attorney General VanWinkle to determine whether the 1931 law is constitutional, and if so, what shall be used in reimbursing the state for the care of the non-violent insane patients. Multnomah county already has received an opinion from its legal department that the 1931 act is constitutional. Similar to One in Neighbor States Officials declared Saturday that laws similar to the one now in operation in Oregon had been in effect in the states of Washington and California for several years. Both of these acts were said to be constitutional, and have operated very satisfactorily. Returns from the law in Washington were said to have been larger than anticipated at the time the act was first considered by the legislature. A somewhat similar situation has developed in the state of California.

Ben Wing, who is in charge of administering the law in Oregon, has estimated that payments in this state will exceed $300,000 annually. This money will be credited to the general fund of the state and will be used for the payment of current expenses.

In addition to providing for the support of the non-violent insane, the law also provides that estates of relatives of patients in the state tuberculosis hospitals shall pay no more than $15 per week for the support of these charges. Provision is made in the law that in cases where relatives and estates cannot pay the maximum amount, lesser payments may be received and approved. There also is a provision in the act authorizing the state to collect a maximum of $20 per month for the support of persons confined in the state home for the feeble minded company.

Eyerly Device Gives All Thrills of Real Flying; Amusement Use Forecast

Patents covering features of probably the most unusual amusement machine ever seen around Salem are now being sought by the Eyerly Aircraft corporation. It's the next best thing to flying your own airplane, manipulating an airplane whose growth was stunted and "fies" on its mounting in a manner to give any man, other than a stunt pilot, a great thrill.

In addition to offering opportunities for unique amusement to laymen, the machine serves as an orientator, for training airplane pilots. It fills a real need in a pilot's instruction, according to Lee U. Eyerly, the designer and builder, for it gives the novice in flying a safe opportunity to get the feel of banking properly on turns, maintaining airplane in even flight, diving, looping, rolling and other maneuvers which are essential to the Eyerly school now make several "flights" in the machine, getting at least an hour's practice in it before handling the controls of a real airplane.

This orientator is a radical departure from the usual design. Its controls, which have been made simple in action, are identical with those of an airplane. It has the "stick" and the conventional foot-controlled rudder. This orientator is constructed with fuselage and cockpit of fabric-covered steel tubing, in appearance like that of an airplane. For maneuvering, it has two flippers which serve as ailerons, and elevators and rudder on the tail.

The pilot of the machine not only gets the feel of this maneuvering but from the 15 horsepower motor driven propeller receives the sensation of wind blast. The propeller blast also serves to give the controls their action and the feel of the force upon which the controls act.

The mounting of this "plane" which flies and does not ever get anywhere consists of two steel uprights which support the crosspieces to which the fuselage is welded. It revolves 360 degrees on a round base on a steel framework on wheels to give the machine its lateral axis.

The crosspieces fitted into the uprights revolve 360 degrees to give the "plane" its vertical axis, and the fuselage with the control surfaces attached revolves 360 degrees around on a stationary part containing the motor to give the longitudinal axis. The motor is hung on a sliding base so that it may be moved forward or backward to balance the weight of the person in the cockpit.

Pilots from all over the northwest have become interested in the machine, many of them hoping to try it for themselves. Inquiries as to its cost have come from as far away as the airport at Vancouver, B. C.

As a result of the success of this first machine, Eyerly is already planning the construction of a second orientator, with defects in the present one remedied. Its simplicity of design makes it far more economical to build than are other orientators, according to Eyerly.

Meal Planning Demonstration To Be Offered

The Portland General Electric company is announcing a "meal planning" demonstration for housewives which will be held in the display rooms of the company today from two to four p. m. BOOK EXCHANGE IS URGED BY HOWARD

Points out Saving Possible To High School Youth; Systems Outlined

The 1931 legislative act providing for district ownership of textbooks applies only to elementary schools, according to an announcement made by G. S. Howard, state superintendent of public instruction. High school students will continue to purchase their own books.

Mr. Howard is urging the organization of book exchanges and the introduction of a rental system, as a means of reducing the high school textbook expense. "Many of your students will find it difficult to secure the necessary textbooks when school opens this fall," Howard said in a letter to high school principals. "Any plan you can work out for lightening the burden in this connection will be appreciated by the parents and by our students. I suggest the setting up of book exchanges in your schools through which students may buy and sell used textbooks. All Expense Cuts Possible Are Urged Expense for high school students can be reduced materially by a rental plan and I earnestly suggest that the organization of such a system be inaugurated at the earliest opportune time. In the beginning, such a system need not cover all the books in use in the high schools. If it were to include only one book for each grade, such as mathematics, civics and American history, it would save a considerable amount of money to the parents of your high school students.

"I am sure that the high school principals of Oregon can be depended upon to carefully study every feature of the administration of the schools under their charge looking not only to the elimination of every item of unnecessary expenditure of public funds but to possible reductions in student expenditures as well.

SHERIFFS TO ISSUE LICENSES IS PLAN

Plans are being worked out by Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state, whereby motor vehicle owners will receive their license plates from the sheriffs of the various counties instead of through the Salem automobile department.

Hoss said such a plan would eliminate delays and the cost would be no greater than under the present system. Other labor-saving innovations also are being considered by the secretary of state.

Material reductions in the operating personnel of the state motor vehicle department will be announced within the next two weeks, Hoss said. There are now approximately 160 persons employed in the motor vehicle division.

Double this number of persons are employed during the peak of the motor vehicle license rush.
