

TALK PLAN TO INSURE LABOR

System is Outlined Before Labor Delegates at Tuesday Session

referred to a committee, and copies will be sent to Detroit, Mich., where the national convention of the legion will be held next week.

Thirteen new resolutions were introduced at the morning session. These included a plan for national unemployment insurance to cover all workers, nationalization of railroads, regulation of contract haulers, fixing responsibility of auto truck accidents upon the employers as well as the drivers, and urging the establishment of a five-day week and six hour day for workers.

Other resolutions provided for placing a certain manufacturing company, tax-cab company, banking company and ice cream factory under national control on union labor's unfair list.

A plea for support of the campaign to release Tom Mooney from the California state penitentiary, came before the convention in the form of a letter written by Mooney asking for financial support. Joe Reed, Portland delegate, took the floor and urged that the letter be given careful consideration. Reed also asked that the case of Billings be considered along with Mooney's letter.

Mooney set out in his letter that his case probably would receive consideration at the time the national convention is held in San Francisco in October. Bennett Explains Bond Issue Plan

J. E. Bennett, state senator from Multnomah county, urged the federation to support his bill for the state to raise $50,000,000, which would be loaned to owners of real property at a low rate of interest. He declared that such a program would relieve unemployment, encourage building, prevent mortgage foreclosures and place a large amount of money in circulation. The convention's committee on law and legislation was ordered to confer with Bennett regarding the plan.

C. E. Hulet, master of the Oregon state grange, made an effective plea for cooperation between the laborer and producer. He declared that a better marketing system was needed. Hulet also said he was opposed to paying excessive salaries to high officials while the laboring man and the farmer are unable to live decently. He further requested that closer consideration be given to the qualifications of men who seek public office.

"Just so long as we continue to elect men who vote with the special interests, just so long we may expect to be kept from securing those rights and privileges that are justly ours," he declared. Machine age Gets Blame in Address

The machine age, coupled with the lack of foreign markets, was declared responsible for the present depression and unemployment situation by James Taylor, president of the Washington state federation of labor.

"Virtually everything that we use at the present time is now manufactured in foreign countries with American money," Taylor said. "As a result of this and other causes we must adjust ourselves to a domestic market and allow Europe to take care of itself. Labor believes in the development of the machine to a limited degree, but not to such an extent that it will rob our people of employment."

Taylor said the Washington state federation of labor would oppose the creation of a state police department, such as was authorized in Oregon at the 1931 legislative session.

"I fear eventually you will have the Pennsylvania constitution," he said.

Eugene Smith of Portland discussed international war debts and other problems. Resisting war debts for the Payments Favored Smith proposed that as each creditor nation pays to the United States its annual annuities that congress remit to a committee in such creditor country the money received. This money later would be spent by the commissions of the several countries for the uplift and benefit of their people. He said such an elimination would increase wages, stimulate competition, promote trade and commerce, and in the end restore prosperity.

Other speakers included J. J. Hanksaker and Otto Hartwig, president of the Oregon state federation of labor.

Hartwig declared that the six hour day for workers appeared ideal in the solution of the unemployment problem.

Additional telegrams were received by the convention yesterday urging that the 1932 meet-

Communications from various Parent-Teacher organizations and other women's groups urged the convention to give careful consideration to a resolution introduced yesterday endorsing the proposal to modify the prohibition law. These communications voiced strong opposition to such action on the part of the Oregon federation of labor.

The delegates will spend most of this afternoon on a trip to Silver Creek falls. The annual convention banquet is scheduled for Wednesday night.

tender of Judge Rosman for assistance. It was also voted to distribute the funds which are to be raised through existing charity organizations.

It was felt that in the Associated Charities and the Salvation Army there were bodies already at work and with facilities and experience which could be used to advantage. Their need has been funds and will undertake to supply.

Salem is not to be a haven of refuge for the destitute and willfully idle from over the country. Transients are to be sent on to their homes. The people to receive first consideration are the local people, though of course temporary relief would be extended to transients. Discussion of provision of employment also came up; and through other committees it is planned to stimulate the provision of jobs for men and women, giving them opportunity to earn something by labor. Public bodies will provide considerable work, but that will go first to the heads of families.

Beloved Pets To Appear in Parade Here

Once upon a time a little girl was very hard to earn some money and when it was tightly clutched in her hand she marched to a pet store and purchased a toy terrier dog; a roly-poly puppy whose funny little face had been stealing her heart for days.

No thought of ice cream cones, candy or clothes could creep into the heart of the small maid and tease away from her the precious puppy. She took it home and then followed some of the happiest hours of her life while she and the pup romped about the yard. With a pet to play with like the happy dog there was no urge to play at the neighbors and mother was much relieved.

Then came a sad day when some carelessly constructed person came along and stole the puppy and left a broken hearted child. In time grandparents were able to present a week bunny-rabbit, yellow and round-eyed to the unhappy youngster and now the rabbit is arousing a new interest and teaching the child a still wider love for pets.

The child is Katherine Godly, nine year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Godley, and her present pet is "Beauty." It is to be entered in the "pet parade" which the Mickey Mouse members of Warner Bros. Elsinore will present in Salem within a short time.

The idea of emphasizing the beauty and importance of pets in the life of a child is splendid, and what the parents will learn about their children's love and pride and interest in the pets as shown in this parade will not unlikely be a surprise to them.

Shortly after the meeting was to be called a number of members of the Monmouth faculty, the members of the football team and the president came into the meeting place.
