Blacksmith Shop Owned by Perry Nucleus Around Which Town Grew; Interesting Facts Are Recorded

By MRS. BOB MITCHELL
Ferrydale, when it was young, was named Ferryville for William Perry who had the first blacksmith shop in the year 1835. Shortly after the blacksmith shop was built, First Store in Use John McGrew put up a small building to be used for a general merchandise store and postoffice. This building is still in use but it was moved back and a larger building erected in 1879 for a store and the old building being used as a store room. It is still in use and occupied now by Mrs. J. E. Tokum.

In 1870 the first schoolhouse was put up. It stood, as can be easily described, across the road from the Dan Elliott home just north of the railroad. The schoolhouse was very small and only used a short time, then another was built where the present house was built and the old one purchased by Dred Hedding and used for a furniture store.

One of the first school teachers here was J. Early Pedagogues K. Sears; others in 1890 were P. J. Mulkey and A. H. Mulkey; in the periods between '95 and '99 A. J. Shipley taught. The records of the school from 1870 to 1890 were destroyed by fire.

In '78 the railroad was laid through Ferrydale and about this time George McGrew put in a drug store that stood on the corner where John Jolly now lives. In a few months a second drug store was erected on the corner now in use by J. E. Houk hardware and grocery. In this building was a doctor's office and a millinery shop besides the drugs. The town was going good and three saloons were opened up along with a wagon shop by Dick Ennes. The wagon making was a profitable business in those days.

A large 12-room hotel was put up and run by Mary Wells, it was located near the depot. This building burned in 1888. In 1887 two churches were built, a Methodist and Christian. The Methodist building was discontinued as a house of worship some ten years ago.

In 1890 the first furniture store was erected by L. A. Tingle, later this was purchased by Fred Hedding who later added hardware.

In January, 1919, J. E. Houk purchased the hardware and furniture store from Fred Hedding, later moving to the present location and using the building vacated for a garage and storage room for machinery.

D. L. Keyt erected the flour mill and a warehouse in 1901. H. J. Elliott bought it in 1908. He has not made flour for several years but has greatly enlarged the warehouses.

While Perryville was not as large as Loses, but prospers in 1903, it is a community of prosperous farms, and large dairies, it also boasts fruit acreage where some of the best apples and prunes in the state are grown and for still smaller fruit there is an 11-acre strawberry farm and numerous chicken ranches.
