BOLOFF CONVICTION IS GIVEN APPROVAL

Membership in Communist Party Criminal, say Four of Justices

Conviction of Ben Boloff of Multnomah county, on a charge of criminal syndicalism, and his subsequent sentence of 10 years in the Oregon state penitentiary, were upheld in an opinion handed down by the state supreme court Tuesday.

The opinion was written by Justice Rossman, with Justices Brown, Campbell and Kelly concurring. Justices Rand and Belt dissented in special opinions. The predominating opinion affirmed the decree of Judge Ekwall of the Multnomah county circuit court.

The indictment against Boloff charged that he had assisted in the organization of the communist party in Portland on August 29, 1930, and had been active in teaching doctrines suggestive of criminal syndicalism, sabotage and revolution. Eight alleged assignment of errors were contained in the defendant's brief, upon appeal to the supreme court.

The principal testimony at the trial of Boloff was offered by M. R. Bacon, Portland police officer, who, in order to gain information as to the nature and activities of the communist party, became a member and later an officer of the organization. Bacon testified that the Portland unit had approximately 50 members, and had adopted as a symbol a large red flag typical of Soviet Russia. A large amount of communist literature obtained by Bacon was turned over to the officers.

Other important witnesses against Boloff included W. B. Odale, Portland police officer, and Ralph P. Bonham, United States immigration official with headquarters in Oregon.

Penalty is up to Court and Governor

In discussing that part of defendant's brief that the penalty imposed upon Boloff was too severe, Justice Rossman said:

"Were the scant information which we have concerning the defendant's past sufficient to produce certainty in our minds that the penalty is too severe, we might be justified in giving heed to this final plea. But under the circumstances, we are compelled to resort to the rule that the nature of the penalty is intrusted, in the first instance, to the discretion of the trial judge, and, finally, to the mercy of the chief executive.

"It must be borne in mind, however, that the conviction of the defendant has been sustained by reason of proof which showed that the organization of which he was an active member, the communist party, threatened immediate danger, through violence, to our industrial and governmental status."

Justice Rand, in dissenting, said:

"There was no overt act upon defendant's part proven in this case. I do not believe that the mere fact that defendant was a member of the communist party is sufficient in itself along to justify his conviction of the crime with which he was charged."

Communist Speech Held not Admissible

The dissenting opinion of Justice Belt read, in part:

"In my opinion it was error to receive in evidence, over the objection of defendant, the testimony of Odale as to the substance of a speech made by Levitt, an alleged member of the communist party. If there were any evidence that the communist party had sanctioned or ratified such speech, it might be admissable as tending to show what the party advocated. But such is not the state of the record.

"I find no authority which approves what seems to me such an extreme and dangerous rule as that announced by Justice Rossman. Neither do I believe that expert testimony is admissable to show what the communist party teaches and advocates. In fairness to the trial court, it may be said that the latter testimony was admitted without objection.

"The criminal syndicalism act was enacted during the late World war as a sort of an emergency measure. To extend its application to a poor, ignorant sewer digger who entertains erroneous ideas concerning governmental affairs and to imprison him in the penitentiary for a period of 10 years is, in my opinion, not in keeping with the proper administration of justice. Throughout the centuries, jails have never been able to kill ideas. It is doubtful if they can do so in this modern and turbulent age."

Other Opinions Are Announced

Other opinions handed down here Tuesday follow:

Cassie Geraldine Ross, appellant, vs. Fred Collman; appeal from Klamath county. Suit to restrain defendant from destroying fence. Opinion by Justice Rossman. Judge W. M. Duncan affirmed.

Occurrences and Gossip at the center of Oregon's state government

THE need for a get-together party of state officials and heads of departments was clearly demonstrated here yesterday. A. A. Schramm, state banking superintendent, and William Einsig, state purchasing agent, met for the first time. Yet both have offices in the same building, but both no doubt have been too busy with their own affairs.

With this incident as a background, surely John Mickie and Hal E. Hoss, who have suggested such a get-acquainted event, can lay definite plans to stage such a party. The social season is now on, and what would be the matter with having an evening dinner, an informal program, and a good time some time early next month?

There no doubt are many departmental heads and deputies who do not know who the other officials are, but who would enjoy knowing them and meeting them under those circumstances. Max Gehlhar said he knows few state officials, but would like too. A dinner like the press convention "whoopee party," with Hal Hoss as toastmaster, has been suggested.

And speaking of Max Gehlhar reminds that Tusko is still with us. The giant elephant will be moved to one of the barns at the state fair as soon as the new chains (tool-proof steel perhaps) which the purchasing board has ordered arrive. Gehlhar says it looks like he will remain the property of the state for some time.

Another suggestion made was that Tusko be used to move Ethelbert, the now famous Portland whale, from fresh water into salt water at Jantzen beach. Tusko is a healthy animal and he perhaps could induce or lift the whale into better quarters.

After the whale moving act, another plan to dispose of Tusko would be to turn him over to the board of control. When that board fires anyone, he usually remains fired. Why not give it jurisdiction over the elephant and then fire him. Surely the board could devise some means of removing such an obstacle, either in a one, two or three-man meeting.

Well, Charles M. Thomas can devote his time now to telephone rates and petroleum tariffs. His part as chairman of the state's move against an increased rate of 15 percent on products shipped by rail was successful. At least the interstate commerce commission denied a flat 15 percent increase to railroads

Hoover has suggested the nation turn out all lights for a minute to pay homage to Thomas A. Edison. To show the stupendous influence Edison had upon life and industry, why not a minute's halt of all electricity? It is impossible to grasp just how great an event that would be as mere man is incapable of picturing how industry could be wrecked by just a minute without electricity and power.

Shooting certainly doesn't pay. State police officials assisted by county officers yesterday captured the two bandits who shot State Patrolman Amos Helm. It will go hard with them. And James Kingsley is in the death cell at the state penitentiary awaiting his execution next week for shooting and killing an officer. One just can't get away with it.

There will be no supreme court opinions handed down next Tuesday. The court will hold its regular October session at Pendleton where 16 cases will be reviewed. The majority of the court yesterday held that a man who is an active member of a communist party, is guilty of criminal syndicalism.

A check for four cents was included in the first bunch of warrants issued yesterday by the secretary of state's office in refunding the 1929 intangibles taxes. Hoss said he mailed out 1500 warrants, but that others took up the slack of the 4 cent one, and the total sum came to more than $47,000. Holman finally found the million dollars he wanted to borrow, but the rest of us are still looking for the person with a dollar to loan.

License Bureau Cost Cut Says Report of Hoss

Administration costs of the state motor vehicle department for September, 1931, decreased approximately $3000, when compared with the expense in September, 1930, according to a report prepared Tuesday by Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state. Further cost reductions will be made on November 1, Hoss said.

On October 1 of this year the operating personnel of the motor vehicle department included 90 persons, as against 116 on the same date a year ago.

The cost reductions was made possible through a combination of equipment, and modernized system of handling the various operations.
