FRUIT HARVEST IS BROUGHT TO CLOSE

The late fruit harvest season was brought rapidly to a close under generally favorable weather conditions and with yields turning out about as earlier estimates indicated, according to the current report of Paul C. Newman, agricultural statistician. No change was necessary following harvest in the October estimates of late Oregon, fruit crops with the exception of dried prunes and pears.

A generally unfavorable season from beginning to end in the commercial pear section of southern Oregon finally culminated in an attack of the late brood of codling moth the damage from which did not become fully apparent until picking began. The unusua! amount of worm damage and the large proportion of small sizes combined to reduce the tonnage. Oregon grape production this year is one of the largest recorded and the quality is excellent.

There is no change in the earlier apple figures this month. Worm damage is running heavy and on the light crop this year the damage is particularly severe. Some decrease in the reported condition of the waln . and filbert crops during October but the earlier tonnage estimates were considered conservative and remain unchanged.
