AUTOMATIC ALARM SYSTEM IS URGED

Fire Underwriters Report Also on Water Supply Improvement Need

Installation of a telegraphic fire alarm system for Salem and civil service for its fire department employees are prominent among the recommendations made in a report of the National Board of Fire Underwriters through its committee on fire prevention and engineering standards. The report for Salem supercedes one of 1927.

Among the recommendations was one concerning the water supply. It urged that additional high and low lift pumps be installed or reservoir capacity increased so that the system is able to deliver the required fire flow for 10 hours during periods of maximum consumption. It is also urged that suction and discharge piping be so arranged that a single break will not affect the operation of more than one pump. Additional fire extinguishers for the pumping stations are recommended.

Under the Occurrences and Ominy at the center of Oregon's state government

SUNDAY certainly came around in a hurry again. It was just three days ago it was here before, at least so it has seemed, making two fast weeks since the last issue of the comic sections of Sunday papers. Well, the holiday week is over, so things can get down to normalcy again for a long three weeks.

Tusko is no longer a resident of Salem. Without advance notice the owners attempted quietly to load the huge elephant onto a trailer and take him to Portland. But before the two-hour task of getting him loaded and out of the barn was completed quite a crowd had assembled to bid the popular guest a fond farewell.

To those informed of the loading process, the event proved to be about the best exhibition of animal training and maneuvering seen in Salem. And it was not without its excitement and danger. There was action all the time. The effort to attach the loading chains onto the elephant until he was pulled out of the city.

And there perhaps is no one more relieved since the removal of the unbidden guest than Mrs. Ella Wilson, secretary of the state fair. She has had the worry of Tusko for a long time, since he was housed in one of the goat barns at the fairgrounds. She was also relieved when the animal ducked the barn door and made his exit with grace.

Portland welcomed the elephant. Now that she has lost her whale, and can summon no protection urged for home equities.

Way out for Jobless With No Means to Continue Payments Sought

Urging that an advisory committee of some sort to aid unemployed and needy persons holding equities in homes in this county in maintaining payments during the depression should be organized within the next few days, the governor at his offices, although he almost came down Friday. Lack of pressing business, combined with cold weather, resulted in his change of plans.

PENALTY REPEAL NO DELINQUENCY CAUSE

Figures at Statehouse Tend To Show Little Change In Payment Rate

Records in the state tax commission and state treasurer indicate that abolition of the penalty and lowering of the interest rate on delinquent taxes by the 1931 legislature, apparently has not added materially to the number of delinquent taxpayers.

The 1931 legislature lowered the interest rate on delinquent taxes from 12 to eight per cent.

A study conducted several years ago indicated that delinquency varied all the way from one per cent or less in Multnomah, Marion and a few other prosperous Willamette valley counties, to around 10 per cent in some of the eastern and southern Oregon counties. At the time the study was completed the average delinquency over a six year period was fixed at five per cent.

Utah Survey Shows About Same Ratio

While this survey was declared not to be official and virtually as found in similar investigation conducted in Utah in 1927. The Utah survey showed an average delinquency of 5.7 per cent, which officials said probably was applicable to all of the western states over the last 10 or 15 years. It was made plain, however, that the percentage of delinquencies have varied considerably in different states from year to year, depending upon business conditions and general rural activities.

A study conducted last winter by the ways and means committee of the Oregon legislature, while only partial and incomplete, showed the following conditions in approximately one-half of the counties reported:

Parcels of land delinquent, 53,763; acres delinquent, 2,499,584; assessed value, land, $21,986,023; assessed value city lots, $47,352,606.

Number personal property assessments delinquent, 4211; assessed value delinquent personal property, $3,800,012; amount delinquent on real estate, $5,978,159; amount delinquent on personal property, $264,904.

The records show that delinquencies have increased progressively over the last few years, due principally to the increased and ever-mounting tax burden on real property, a statement issued Saturday read, "Lumber and livestock counties especially have been hard hit by the depression, and low price schedules.

Farm Conditions Will Determine

"Whether the pinch of delinquencies will become acute next year or diminish, probably will depend more on whether the farmers are able to realize better prices for their products. A resumption of the lumber industry also would add materially to the prosperity of the state, and have the effect of reducing delinquencies."

The appraised value of tillable agricultural lands in Oregon in 1930 was $243,612,368.20. The timber land valuations $68,631,956, with non-tilable and valuations of $67,083,465.

Reports were received here a few months ago that there was to be a general tax strike in different parts of the state, and that many farmers would refuse to pay their second-half remittances to the county officials. This report is not borne out by the last half tax collections for this year. Records of the state treasurer show that the collections have been satisfactory.

JUSTICE BRANDEIS PRAISED BY BELT

Impartiality, Clear Logic Of Jurist Told Before Bar Association

Building his speech around the life and legal juristic accomplishments of Justice Louis D. Brandeis, member of the United States supreme court bench, Judge Harry E. Belt of the Oregon supreme court Saturday addressed the monthly dinner meeting of the Marion County Bar association held at the Marion hotel.

Justice Brandeis was praised as "a poor man's lawyer who rose to this position from the aristocracy." Delving into his record as a lawyer, Judge Belt illustrated by definite citations the impartiality of Brandeis with aspects between capital and labor, his knowledge of facts and his definite views as to right and wrong.

"Although he often served as attorney for corporations and for money men, he refused to serve in any legal capacity except where he believed the claim of his client justified," said the speaker. It was this attitude as well as his great ability that won for him the supreme court appointment to the supreme court, according to Judge Belt.

Objections Raised Because of Faith

In sketching briefly this portion of the life of Brandeis, Judge Belt pointed out that while the objections raised to his appointment were not all of this sort, many were made because of the fact that he is a Jew. "His record as a jurist since that time has proved the wisdom of President Wilson in insisting that the appointment be accepted."

A clear analysis of facts and a deep understanding were credited as the great forces in molding his success as a member of bar and bench.

Judge Belt found in the life of Justice Brandeis the personification of many of the ideals upon which this nation was founded and around which bar associations strive to work. "The law," he said, "is a developing science and members of the profession much recognize it as such."

While this meeting of the association was not a business meeting, the following six men were voted into membership: Clarence Simmons, Lee Crawford, I. H. Van Winkle, Archie MacDonald and Victor Griggs.

Stores Receive Big Percentage

factory, and compare favorably with those of previous years.
