CONTRACT BRIDGE "The Official System"

as Adopted by Leading Authorities By E. V. SHEPARD

Half the Needless Losses of Games Happen on the First Trick

Few players look ahead far enough. When the first lead is made and dummy is boarded the declarer too often is still chattering or thinking about the previous hand, instead of studying the lead made, dummy, and his own hand. The hand shown below affords an illustration of the necessity of thinking of your play to the first trick.

Bidding of the hands went: Z, 1-Club; neither A nor B did anything except pass; Y, 1-Diamond; Z, 2-No Trumps; Y, 3-No Trumps. The opening lead was A's fourth-best heart. Deducting 4 from 11, Z knew that B held two higher cards of the suit led than the 4; probably the king lay with A; B played his 8 and, without thinking, costing him game. Z did not realize the error he had made until he had won a trick with his king of diamonds and attempted to gain entry to dummy. Of course he could not enter Y's hand; Z led his 3 of hearts; A took the trick with the king; Y's 10 was played and B's 9 fell. Of course A knew that only the ace of hearts was missing from his suit; he did not care whether that was held by B or Z, because Y's queen and the missing ace must fall together, so he led back a low heart and Z was in the lead with five perfectly good diamonds starting at him from dummy, with no possible means of entering Y's hand. Z gave A a club trick, and the latter ran off his two good hearts, upon which B discarded two worthless diamonds and Z let go one spade and one club; a spade lead put Z in; again he led a club. B's jack won the trick and a return lead of a spade took out Z's last card of that suit, with his clubs still unestablished. Another lead of clubs put B in. A was smart enough to discard his blocking spade, so that A took his two spade tricks, giving A-B a total of eight tricks, defeating Z by four tricks.

All Z had to do to fulfill his contract was to win the opening lead with his ace of hearts, instead of his jack, lay down his king of diamonds, lead a small heart, which A must win. No matter what return lead A made Z must finally win ten tricks, one trick more than his game contract. Dumb play costing five tricks is expensive; certainly Mr. Hoover never would excuse such a waste.

Independence—The Independence training school teachers complimented the faculty of the Moonmouth training school at a charming St. Valentine party held in the Woman's club room, Wednesday night. Seven tables of cards were in play and high scores were won by Mrs. C. A. Stanwood and Harry Keeney.
