Lightweight Offering in Biggest Demand in Northwest

PORTLAND, March 10.—(AP)—Extreme shortage of live chickens in the local trade at this time is due mostly to the keenness of the call along with adverse weather conditions.

Most of the demand in the live chicken trade is in the lightweight offerings. These are sought solely on account of the extreme low price in effect.

This movement of market has been so long continued that it appears that many of the weak holders are already out of the game.

Market for eggs continued to show steady values locally and generally along the coast.

With quality decreasing in late arrivals of dressed hen turkeys and with the tons more or less in different a slipping trade tone and price is reflected in the local market.
