Twisters Leave Swath of Death and Desolation In Four States

(Continued from page 1) the death list was placed at 12. Marion, Ala., had two tornadoes, one in the afternoon and another after dark.

M. L. Fleetwood, editor of the Cartersville (Ga) News made a hurried survey of the storm area in the rural section between there and Cassville, Ga., tonight and said it presented a scene of utter desolation. Gus Cannon, a farmer, was killed and his wife and five children were found huddled in a hole from which a giant tree had been blown by the storm. A two weeks old baby was carried by its mother when she and her other children fled to safety when their home was wrecked.

Two others, Claude Carroll, 28, and Noah Dover, were listed as Hotel Blown Down,

Two Men Are Killed Two men were killed in Uniontown, Ky., when a hotel was late today. Physicians and volunteer rescue parties battled through rain and along debris strewn highways to reach plantation cabins levelled by the two tornadoes that struck Marion.

A relief party followed the second tornado early tonight found the highway to Scotts Station blocked and was forced to return to Marion for saws and axes to cut a path to the stricken village Judson College at Marion was unscathed.

Lomax, a village of 100 population, was destroyed. A truck driver reaching Calera, Ala., told of debris littering the road and bodies of dead and injured lying beside the highway.

to a new book entitled "John Hanson, Our First President," and also to the John Hanson Memorial Association, John Hanson was elected President of the United States in Congress Assembled on November 5, 1781, eight years before Washington was elected President. However, no less an authority than Dr. Herman V. Ames, historian at the University of Pennsylvania, comes forward with the declaration that neither Washington nor Hanson is entitled to the designation as first PresiJent. Dr. Ames points out that Peyton Randolph, of Virginia, who was

George Arliss in "The Man Who Played God" creates a character which stays with one. A very human character, whimsical, and vindictive by turns, and then sweet and extraordinarily understanding. Although it is my opinion that he does not exceed his performance in "Disraeli," yet he gives a more dramatic interpretion and one which the general public will appreciate even more than it did

'Disraeli." The support is excellent, filled as it is with new faces for the screen. Arliss has a habit of choosing little-known screen people for his support. Another thing of interest in listening to the lines spoken by Arliss is that he wrote most of his own lines. And these lines are just as clever and sparkling as one has come to expect from Arliss, They fit him admir-enough in screen productions. The play is of that type represented by the "best" legitimate plays which come back again and again with the public always ready for their return with an enthusiastic welcome.

Barbara Stanwyck is excellent dramatic actress in "Forbidden," now showing at the Capitol. At the beginning one is not so impressed with her performance, but as the lines go on and her part takes on depth she holds one. The theme is a bit sensational but it has a
