Under the Dome... Occurrences and Gossip at the center of Oregon's state government

WATCH your step today. If someone should tell you Governor Meier has resigned, or that Rufus Holman boasted the expense allowances, or that there were no politics being played at the capitol, just remember one thing. This is April Fool's day. And let's hope all the jokes are pleasant ones.

Probably one day too early, but a young man in Portland played an April Fool's joke on our state treasurer yesterday. Just when it began to look as though Holman would be handed the state job on a silver platter, "Mitt" Scherping of Portland comes to Salem and files for the job. Now Holman will probably campaign harder than ever.

Scherping should make a good run too. This is his first venture in politics, which is not always a handicap. He is an aggressive east side Portland business man and has been active in civic work. He is a World War veteran, nice appearing, and is but 38 years of age. At any rate a good race is now on.

A demonstration on the preparation of canned salmon for institutional use will be staged at the state hospital today by a home economics expert. This is the first of the demonstrations to be put on, and will be done without cost to the taxpayers to enable institutions to better prepare and serve canned foods.

Major-General George A. White again is a family man. Mrs. White and their two daughters returned the other day from California where they have been spending the past month enjoying the sunshine. The general, being an newspaperman and still a writer, is interested in the next newspaper party scheduled at the home of Dr. John Evans soon.

Bidders on oil contracts for the next year, to supply the state with about $300,000 of road oil, were more calm at the opening of bids yesterday than they were when the gasoline bids were opened last month. The gasoline contract has not yet been awarded. The purchasing department will refer the oil bids to the board of control.

state industrial accident commission.
