Takes Place of Poling, who Will Deliver Farewell Sermon Sunday

Dr. E. W. Petticord of Los Angeles was assigned to the Salem Evangelical church, succeeding Dr. C. C. Poling, who is retiring from active service after 52 years as pastor, at the annual Oregon conference of the church which closed in Portland Sunday.

Dr. Poling reports conference tabulations showed a good growth in the church the past year. He says the depression brought financial problems to the conference, but appropriations and apportionments were so handled hat the budget shows no deficit.

Outstanding speakers on the program included Bishop G. E. Epps of Cleveland, O., whom the local pastor says gave a remarkably fine address; Bishop M. T. JOURNALISM WORK UNDER DEAN ALLEN

Some Newswriting at Corvallis Also

The school of journalism at the University of Oregon will be merged with the department of industrial journalism at the State college under the revised system of journalism instruction adopted by the state board of higher education, it was announced Monday night.

The aggregate faculty personnel has been reduced 30 per cent, the statement announced, with a like reduction in expenditures for journalism. These constitute the major changes in the journalism | pledged. courses to be offered the next year.

The one school will be under the guidance of one dean, Eric W. Allen. In explaining the course further, the statement released here continues:

Major work leading to bachelor of arts and science degrees and master of arts and science degrees will be given only at the university. Lower division work preredulisite to advanced work at Eugen gene, will be offered on both campuses under the new arrangement

The junior year will be devoted mainly to the more technical courses such as reporting, copyreading, newspaper management, advertising and the law of the press.
