CONVENTIONS RECALL LINCOLN'S NOMINATION

THE WIGWAM IN CHICAGO WHERE LINCOLN WAS NOMINATED History has an uncanny habit of repeating itself and present indications are that 1932 will see an encore in the field of politics. When the Republican and Democratic parties hold their conventions in Chicago in a few weeks, they will be meeting in the city that saw Lincoln, a dark horse, win the nomination for the Presidency 72 years ago under circumstances that form a parallel to the situation that at present prevails in the Democratic Party. Lincoln was swept to the nomination on the crest of the "stop Seward" wave. William H. Seward of New York was the favored candidate, but Lincoln was the second choice of many delegates. When the first ballot was taken in the Wigwam, a $5,000 wooden structure, built for the convention, Seward had 1731/2 votes, while Lincoln had 102. None of the other candidates had more than 50, and nomination required 233. The second ballot gave Seward 184% and Lincoln 181. The third vote gave Lincoln 231% and Seward 180, leaving "Honest Abe" lacking one and one-half votes to win. Ohio switched four votes and the "rail-splitter" was launched on his way to the White House. Not until the night before the convention had Lincoln been seriously considered. But it was then that the "stop Seward" movement reached its peak. A similar situation prevails today. Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt of New York is riding high in the saddle, but there is a formidable obstacle in the way of his nomination in the "stop Roosevelt" movement, headed by former Governor Alfred E. Smith. Unless the two-thirds rule now in force is discarded before balloting begins, it is almost certain that the Smith-Roosevelt antagonism will result in a deadlock, making it a comparatively a land of the saddlock making it a comparatively almost almost certain that the Smith-Roosevelt antagonism will result in a deadlock, making it a comparatively simple matter for a dark horse to romp home with the coveted nomination.

The Corvallis 12 which is being planted rather extensively in this section, has already proved its merit as a can-
