HEN AND CHIX STUDY Or at Least the Children Pretend They Do AT TRAINING SCHOOL

By MAUD BIDGOOD

INDEPENDENCE, June 8—Nowhere in all the world over can a more contented hen be found than old mother Biddy and her 12 tiny yellow chicks, adopted by the independence training school.

The independence training school, kindergarten boys and girls, one corner of the work room, in a large drygoods box covered with wire netting, lives the fine big white Leghorn and her babies, hatched about the middle of May.

The children made the coop, covered the floor with straw, made the nest and put 15 eggs under the hen. Day after day, and the little folk cared for her and as they eagerly awaited the arrival of the little chickens, they learned many facts about them. When at last their little feathered friends opened their eyes to the new world, the joys of the children knew no bounds.

Rabbits, kept in pens built by little hands, and goldfish also are a great pleasure, but a problem as well, for those pets must be fed and cared for. Together with the kind of food for the animals, also the quantity of food and the time of feeding—the cooperative spirit in which the problems are solved is the background for future useful members of any community.

An actual study was only one of the projects in the nature activity program carried out this spring. Another interesting part of the work was the field trips by the children under the supervision of Miss Mignonne Beck.

A recent trip took the group across the Willamette river on the "Claggett," the ferry boat to East Independence. The boys became keenly interested in the boat and forthwith decided to build one for the schoolroom.

An informal afternoon was enjoyed and tea was served at a late hour. The club group will meet again in October. At this time officers will be elected. Mrs. E. O. Moll has been president for this year.

Mickle, commissioner of foods and dairies, who is a member of Bethel local, was present and gave an address on his experiences in Europe where he attended a world dairy congress in London as the representative of the United States government.
