HEADS CHILE

Formerly commander of the Chilean Air Force, Colonel Marmaduke Grow (above), who helped overthrow the government of President Juan Esteban Montero and place Carlos Davila in the saddle, has now assumed the Presidency of Chile's revolutionary junta following the forced resignation of Davila. The latter's downfall centered about the charge that he was too lenient in dealing with foreign interests.

Counsel for the defendant objected to the action on the ground that sufficient injury to the defendant was not set out in the complaint to justify the court taken jurisdiction for a declaratory judgment. The attorneys also argued for a demurrer on the ground that all taxpayers in the city should have been named parties defendant in the action. William H. Trindle, city attorney, adhered to the complaint averring there was ample precedent for such action and for a declaratory judgment from court.

VACATION HEALTH PITFALLS POSTED

Sanitation on Outings is Stressed in Bulletin By State Board

Advent to the vacation season prompts the state department of health to warn tourists against health pitfalls along the road. Prevention of illness on touring trips is explained in a department bulletin, as follows:

This is the time of the year when most people begin to plan on short trips by automobile. The touring fan will seek the out-of-the-way road in order to discover for himself the more beautiful spots of nature. This is particularly true if a person is planning to camp out.

In preparation for a trip of this kind, careful forethought usually given to the necessary spare parts of the car, the kind of clothing to have along, or the fishing equipment needed; but often, little thought is given to the safeguarding of one's health on the trip.

This latter point cannot be too strongly emphasized, because, on such a trip living conditions are often changed so much by exposure to inclement weather, lack of sleep, irregular hours and other factors, that the body may become more susceptible to attack from disease than it would be under the normal home conditions.

Tourist camps of all kinds have sprung up within the past few years. Much has been done recently to improve them but there is yet much more to do. The state health department has set up regulations governing the proper construction and maintenance of tourist camps. The four principal items in any set of regulations might be given as follows: (1) Proper camp location. (2) Safe and adequate water supply. (3) Safe and efficient waste disposal. (4) Facilities for the protection of all food from flies. Another hazard which might affect the automobile traveler is the roadside drinking water supply. On a hot and dusty drive a drink of cool water from "The Old Oaken Bucket" type of well, looks attractive, but from a sanitary viewpoint such open and exposed water supplies are the ones to be avoided.

Careful attention should be given to the source of the milk supply, particularly if there are children in the party. A swimming place should be selected with care also, in order to avoid the use of streams carrying sewage from communities located up stream from the camp.

If your vacation takes you into localities infested with malaria bearing mosquitoes, mosquito netting should be included in your luggage.

Safety from typhoid fever can be secured by vacationists by having typhoid vaccination treatment by the family physician a few weeks before they start from home. Remember that all other rules of sanitation must be observed in addition to taking the vaccine, as it is possible to overcome the protection afforded by the vaccination by mass infection with typhoid germs.

Therefore it devolves upon the tourist himself to see that all sanitary precautions are taken to safeguard his health while on a vacation.
