Contrary to popular belief beauty is not the only asset necessary to a successful carrier in motion pictures Not only that, but though beauty is desirable it is by no means absolutely necessary. The searching eye of the camera often finds what is more important than beauty below the surface of an almost plain face. Many traffic-stopping beauties have come to Hollywood only to find that a screen test showed up their pictured image lacking even the personality of a cigar store Indian. Greta Garbo is not what one would call a beauty in the strict sense of the word, but what she lacks in regularity of feature she more than makes up on artistry and talent. The same is true of Anna Sten, Russian actress, who lately arrived in follywood. Miss Sten would hardly be noticed among a crowd of American business girls, but on the screet she fairly radiates the personality that has won her a place among film notables. Our own Joan Crawford would not make a great showing at an Atlantic City beauty show, but she has the stuff that makes a great artiste and her pictured image attracts more attention than a board-walk full of bathing belies. Then there is Ruth Chat-terton, the magic of whose personality, rather than any claim to pulchritude, is responsible for her success on the films, while Helen Hayes made one of the greatest hits of her career in the character part of a disreputable old woman, with nothing to associate her with beauty but the peerless takent that penetrated her disfiguring make-up. In short, if beauty were the high road to film success, 7 per cent of our American girls would be twinkling in the cerulean sky over Hollywood. Talent is what counts and although many attribute the success of Marlene Dietrich to her shapely legs, the German star would still have the power to sway an audience if these glamorous members were fashioned of wood.
