BUMPER HAY CROP LAMBS UP 25 CENTS, HOGS DOWN

Low Price and Good Quality Raspberries Offered Salem Markets For Storage cut

With a wonderfully fine hay crop now in harvest and the tonnage wore than double last year, the market outlook is for quality hay at low prices, Walter A. Bar-kus, of E. T. Barkus and Son, hay and grain dealers, declares. It is too early to tell what the tonnage in this section will be.

Barkus says in the many years his father and he have been in business here he has seldom seen such a fine hay erop, nor so many of the farmers putting it up in such good shape as they are this year. The vetch hay is free from aphis, the usually persistent pest, and no disease or pest has been found.

Peak of the hay harvest has not yet been reached, but having has been going on in various sections about here since last week. Little hay is coming into town yet, and hauling will probably not start until next week.

Since D. A. White & Sons warehouse, burned to the ground several months ago, has not been rebuilt, the Barkus warehouse offers the largest and practically the only place here for hay storage. Barkus does not have room, either at the town plant or on the farms, to store quite half of the hay that will presumably be offered on the

As result of this shortage of storage space, more hay than usual will probably be left on the farms, and sold from there as the season advances.

The hay market, with advent of the new crop, is already down to $7 a ton on oats and vetch, which variety is planted largely here. There is also considerable clover hay being harvested and some al-

Mr. Barkus estimates that acreage in hay in harvest now in this section this year is about twice as large as last season, as last year fully 30 or 40 per cent of the hay was burned and left in the field to rot due to the adverse weather

Early predictions on the hay crop this year, engendered by the long cold and wet weather, did not indicate the bumper crop at hand. The harvest, in spite of a season virtually a month slow, is on at about the normal period.

Strawberry growers in the Central Howell area, the largest Etterburg district in the county, are so discouraged over this season's harvest that there is some talk of the growers putting in their own cooperative cannery before next harvest season, according to one large grower who was in Salem yesterday.

None of the growers this year had their Etterburgs contracted this year, but most of them were offered three cents by canners for

"From our own large acreage, on which last year we received a $4,000 check from the cannery, we got less than $200 this year, price was so low and grading so great," the grower said.

If the growers in this area do not get to the activity stage on the co-op plant, it is now considered very likely many acres of berries in that area will be plowed under before next season.

Lausanne Conference Breakdown Rumor One Factor

CHICAGO, June 29-(AP) .-Wilted because of recurrent stop loss selling, together with dearth of aggressive support from buyers, grain values experienced plenty of sinking spells today.

Reports the Lausanne conference was facing a breakdown gave the wheat market a black eye and subsequent rallies failed to last. The fact deliveries on July contracts will begin day after tomorrow had a further unsettling influence and so too did word that export demand for wheat from North America was confined almost entirely to Canadian grain.
