The Pringles settled southeast of Salem, where there is a Pringle creek and a Pringle schoolhouse, not far from the state training school for girls.

Grandma Brown was born Tabitha Moffett at Brimfield, Mass., where her father was a physician. Her husband, Rev. Clark Brown, died early in life, leaving her the care of three sons. She taught school in Maryland and Virginia to earn a livelihood and then removed to Missouri. She taught the children of settlers there.

* * * Her thoughts turning to Oregon, she started across the plains at the age of 66, in company with a son, an aged brother-in-law and a party of emigrants. She had a good covered wagon and ox team outfit when she started. But she lost everything, and all but starved, as indicated in yesterday's article.

She started her boarding school that was the beginning of Pacific first dwelling in what became and a daughter, Phyllis Lenore, university, in a log house, after spending the winter of '46-7 in the Lee house. For tuition and board she at first charged the children of the early settlers $1 a week, and often took the pay in duced to $30, was a high light of supplies, and where they were orphans and could not pay, nothing
