Those orchardists who hadn't sprayed their cherries for cherry fly the required number of times were out of luck as the Salem canneries would not accept their crop.

BEING "only a newspaperman" sorta went down in value yesterday following the escapades of William Carver, former newspaperman of Salem, Marshfield and Astoria. Bill Carver was arrested and is being held under observation at the state hospital. But Bill had quit the newspaper game and gone to farming.

Carver is particularly remembered for his activities in 1922 during the campaign on the school bill. Bill was one of the high officials of the Ku Klux Klan, and it was during this time he was engaged in newspaper work and publicity in Marshfield. Until recently he had been located at Astoria.

The supreme court, somewhat off schedule, handed down 11 opinions late yesterday afternoon. Tuesday, the regular day for opinions, probably came too soon after the Fourth of July, at any rate none were issued at that time. The court does not hand down verdicts during the month of August.

Well, one thing is settled after ten days of controversy, conferences, proposals and a counter proposals, and its right back where it started. There will be no competition in sale of automobile license plates. Hoss still will issue them—and there will be no plates purchased on the quarterly license plan.

Now it is assumed the public will concentrate on the other two means for delaying payment of licenses. There are extension of the 15 day moratorium and the calling of a special session of the legislature for reduction of the fees and for quarterly payment of licenses. An extended moratorium is being urged already.

Thus with the governor declaring he could not carry out his promise to issue licenses because Hoss refused to cooperate and that he ran up against a stone wall, and Hoss declaring it illegal for him to issue them on a quarterly payment basis, the battle of moments has ended—perhaps. At least there may be a lull for the time being.

There was a fire at the supreme court building yesterday. Some one threw a cigarette out of the window and it landed on one of the awnings on the east side of the building.

DALLIES BOND PLAN IS RULED ILLEGAL

Toll Bridge Issue Would Raise Debt Above the Limit, Says Court

The state supreme court put a quietus on plans of The Dalles to guarantee interest on a $650,000 toll bridge bond issue when it held the city would thereby increase its debt beyond the limit allowed by the state constitution. The court reversed the opinion of Judge Fred Wilson of the Wasco county court who had denied an injunction against the bonds to J. T. Roriek, a taxpayer who protested against the issuance of the bridge indebtedness. The city had defended the issue on the grounds that a contingent liability did not become a debt until it was actually due. Justice John Rand wrote the opinion.

The court held in an opinion written by Chief Justice Bean that it was not necessary for George R. E. Harney, treasurer of the city of Portland, to refer to the voters there an ordinance authorizing purchase of certain property on Front street as a public market. The opinion affirmed the decree of Judge Arlie G. Walker who issued an order dismissing the alternative writ of mandamus.

The ordinance was attacked by Walter W. Whitbeck on the ground that the emergency clause attached thereto was invalid for the reason that the ordinance is a "franchise ordinance" and therefore could not become effective under the Portland city charter until the expiration of 60 days after its passage.

The charter of Portland, according to the supreme court opinion, vests in the council power and authority to provide for the establishment of market houses and places and to regulate the location and management thereof.
