THE judge instructs the jurythe four women and eight men take the case—the jury goes out to dinner—the jury reclaims have been taken along the turns from dinner, many of the North Fork of the Santiam and in the Quartzville creek area and its their teeth as they leisurely tributaries during the last few stroll back to the jury room. The jury was still out and the fate of a man hung in the balance at the time this was written.

> And a jury sometimes does unusual things. Just what these men and women will do, readers will probably know before turning the page to this column. They had already been out for some time and a young man by the name of Poe, who has been decidedly composed during the trial, still did not know whether he would hang, would live or be free.

> But we are drifting from the dome. And there is plenty there all the time to make the front pages. Vacation season seemingly has not affected news stories out of the capitol, and right at the moment there are a lot of employes absent on annual vacations.

A new highway commissioner s expected to be appointed sometime today by the governor. The bonus commission meets but late information has it that only routine business will be transacted. > Activities on a major scale were resumed yesterday at the National Guard headquarters, as the chief officials and other officers returned from various parts. General George A. White, Colonel Ray Olson and others returned from the division encampment at Fort Lewis after a two weeks session.

Brigadier General Thomas E. Rilea also returned from Washington, New York and other eastern ports from a trip on guard business. Tom says he was busy in Washington, as he had to adto call out the Marines and start prosperity back on the road before he could come back.

We knew somebody was doing a lot of these things and peared on the up and up, but we didn't know our own Tom did it. Tom modestly said he kept in the background and wouldn't let his name be printed in that connection, so that explains everything. What's your next move, Tom?

A rumor around the capitol yesterday had it that Charles P. Pray, stern superintendent of state police and a man too busy to pay much attention to the pastimes of others, was about to take up golf. Confirmation of the rumor could not be secured although one news-paperman mentioned the subject to Pray but wouldn't re-veal his findings.

Governor Meier, at the capitol esterday, tanned by sun and wind and looking healthier than ever, said as yet he had not outlined his policy on the amount Oregon would borrow from the reconstruction finance corporation. When asked if he had appointed a successor to Leslie Scott, the gvernor came back with a humorous story. So that settled that for the moment.

And on top of that this week ends the moratorium on old license plates, and just when California apparently was get-ting ready to make some extra
