

GAS STORAGE BILL IS EYED

McCord Tells Woodburn Council Proposed "Model" not Satisfactory

WOODBURN, Aug. 17 — The model ordinance on storage of gasoline in cities, as submitted by the state fire marshal, is not practical for this city, City Attorney McCord told the city council Tuesday night. McCord pointed out that the model ordinance makes it unlawful to have more than five gallons of gasoline above ground. Most of the pumps at service stations have overhead storage tanks containing at least 10 gallons.

McCord said that there are probably a number of farmers situated just inside the city limits who have drums of gasoline holding about 50 gallons stored above ground. The ordinance as it stands would also necessitate a number of changes at the Union oil storage station on the east side of the city. However, it was also readily admitted that Woodburn's gasoline ordinance now in effect is obsolete and neither effective or enforceable.

Councilman Espy suggested that the retail dealers in gasoline be interviewed, to which McCord agreed, adding that the "wholesale people be considered also, as they might offer constructive suggestions."

Water Supply Gone

C. J. Espy of the council reported that R. H. Corey has completed a thorough and detailed survey of the city water system, and suggested that the mayor and councilmen look it over. Councilman Hooper questioned Maurice Bogard on safety of the brick wall of the Bogard building left standing after the fire that gutted the place recently. The two-story brick wall, which runs along Hayes street, bulges slightly. Maurice said that three contractors and two architects have inspected the building and have not mentioned that the wall is unsafe. He added that work of tearing down the remains of the old building in preparation for the erection of a new structure will probably begin at the end of this month. Bogard plans to build a one-story brick building.

HAS WRONG LICENSE

WOODBURN, Aug. 17 — Paul Straadin, a resident of Mt. Angel, was fined $10 and costs of the action in the justice court here Tuesday afternoon after having pleaded guilty to a charge of operating his automobile carrying a Washington license. He was arrested several days ago and when he appeared before Justice of the Peace Hiram Overton he had already received his Oregon license plates.
