

HOOVER IS STRONG SAYS JAY COULTER

Bonus Army Encouraged to Stay by Politicians, Amity man Avers

"The administration is seldom popular in Washington, D. C., and that applies to Wilson, to Harding, to Coolidge and now to Hoover," declared Jay Coulter, Williams law school graduate in 1922 and now an adviser to the veterans' bureau in the national capital. Coulter, some for the first time in eight years, is spending most of his time in Amity but was in Salem yesterday to renew acquaintances of long standing.

"I'm of the opinion that President Hoover has done all one man could under the circumstances," Coulter added. "He is gaining steadily in the east; I believe he is stronger back there than here. If he keeps on increasing in strength he may win by November; assuredly, the votes for Roosevelt are going to be anti-Hoover votes more than pro-Roosevelt ballots."

Coulter said Washington had been less affected by depression than most cities although the government building program is slow and the building of homes and apartments by private funds has almost ceased.

The bonus army was encouraged to stay by numerous politicians, in Coulter's opinion. These men wished to embarrass the administration. Coulter said the "battle of Pennsylvania avenue" aroused some interest but didn't interfere that day with the steady conduct of business in his office. Coulter said he noticed with interest that when the army had been ousted from Washington, the state of Virginia refused to entertain and Pennsylvania and Maryland quickly gave out the word it wanted no permanent encampment of bonus seekers in its own confines. The routing of the men from the Antioch camp may have been sudden but in the main the army was well-treated, in Coulter's opinion.

TOURING MAYOR IN GERMANY

On a tour of Europe in search of health, Mayor Anton Cermak of Chicago is shown as he received some pointed information about the famous Bismarck monument (not in the picture) from one of Berlin's obliging policemen. That the cop is used to pointing something other than his finger is evidenced by the pistol at his side. The American mayor plans a visit to his native Czechoslovakia.

nized as an artist and an author. Born in Effingham county, Ill., in 1849, his early education was in the schools of Effingham and McLean counties. In 1873 . . . he began the study of art in earnest at Lincoln, Ill., and later continued his education in Bloomington and Chicago. In 1877 he opened a studio in Bloomington. During his residence there he produced some choice rural landscapes, and portraits of many of the leading citizens of Illinois and adjoining states. Later, his paintings of Colorado scenery included mountain and stream in bolder, rugged beauty. In 1890 he settled in Tacoma, and has found his inspiration in the environments of Puget sound . . . He had been indefatigable in creating and maintaining an interest in historical work.

"His individual investigations of local events have placed before the public almost forgotten facts of history . . . To him and his pioneer associates is due all the credit for discovery, identification and preparation of this historic site . . . The credit of initiative in this celebration belongs to Prof. W. H. Gilstrap."

There is a bust in bronze of Prof. Gilstrap in the Ferry museum, and many of his plantings are there, along with many relics he collected. His death in 1914 was a distinct loss to our sister state.

The Stroller Observes . . .

Interesting Bits of Gossip Picked Up by One Who Knows Salem as It Is and as It Was Long Ago

By THE STROLLER
It hardly sounds possible in this day and age, but Mrs. Ruth Sayre, of 1865 Chemeketa street, twenty years past her allotted sphere of three score years and ten next November, spent her vacation period at Neskowin Beach where a daily plunge in the "briny" was part of her program. Whether she wore a bathing suit of the vintage of the early '80's is immaterial, but the mere fact that she is able to indulge at this pastime at her advanced age bespeaks well for her early raising at her father's farm at Salem Prairie. She was born Ruth Elizabeth Martin and as the fruit of her marriage she is the mother of Mrs. John Farrar, wife of Salem's postmaster, Mrs. Maudie Clendenen of Salem and William Sayre of Portland. Mrs. Sayre was country born and country raised and is remarkably active both mentally and physically. Her life is well spent in taking an interest in the affairs of the younger generation, and in enjoying in full the love and admiration of a legion of intimate friends.

The Stroller sees many things in his daily meanderings over the city's highways and byways with the following being but a few of them!

Frank Bowersox weighing out commodities in the grocery store bearing in part his name. Frank "settled down" in his early youth and started out in life to make his own way. A brother of his, Fred, is a physician and druggist at Monmouth. Frank's father was one of the early day Evangelical ministers in Salem.

Paul Hauser graduated from a sporting goods store to service in a responsible capacity for "Uncle Sam." He accumulated his first twenty thousand dollars by selling and repairing bicycles. Now he figures out the amount of business enjoyed by many of the county's mercantile firms.

Councilman Hal Patton circulating about the business houses in his daily quest for stationer's supplies. "Every ten years he blows himself" for a birthday party and invites all his friends from far and near to partake of the good cheer offered. A visit to Salem is incomplete without a call on Hal. He has served his county and city in the capacities of representative and councilman.

It is as hard to get into the state penitentiary as it is to get out of it. This condition arises from the fact that Fred Drager is stationed at the outer gate as guard and closely questions all

FEDERAL BANKING HELD NECESSARY

BETHEL, Sept. 7.—Banking must be put into the hands of the government for interest on the money has been known to exceed the cost of the building of a highway, Judge L. H. McMahan said in a speech before the members of the Farmers' Union at Bethel Monday night.

A. M. Church made a strong plea for help for the men of the Salem Industrial league. Mrs. J. R. Carruthers volunteered to collect and deliver in Salem any contributions of food and clothing from the Bethel district.

Charles K. Spaulding spoke on taxation, pointing out many items of interest and help to farmers. Workers on highway construction should be rotated in order to give more men a chance to earn. Mr. Spaulding is opposed to any cars being owned by the state, and favors a half reduction on auto license and boys who increase in tax on gas. He would cut down on the cost of administering the government.

John Zag, O. L. Brubaker and J. R. Carruthers were appointed to look into neglected conditions of the highways and roadsides.
