Mule Victory Certain Says Mr. Daniels

Joseph Daniels, secretary of the navy under Woodrow Wilson, passed through Salem Wednesday morning, pleased with Oregon, pleased with the legion convention he had attended and highly delighted with the Maine elections.

"From Portland, Maine to Portland, Oregon, the nation is going democratic this year," declared Daniels who is publisher and editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, at the capital of North Carolina. "You can also count on the south being one hundred per cent democratic."

Daniels greeted several local democrats in a short chat at the Southern Pacific station during the stop of his southbound train. "Mr. Hoover has been a hard-working president, a sincere, able man but in my opinion he has been unable to meet situations as they arose," Daniels said. "He came into office highly touted and felt that by appointment of the commissions all problems could be worked out."

"Was I for Roosevelt? Assuredly; he was my assistant secretary of the navy for seven and one-half years and I assure you he is a navigator." Daniels eyes twinkled. North Carolina is still a dry state in Daniels' opinion. "But the main issue—and I'm still an ardent prohibitionist—is bread and housing, not liquor."
