SPY RUMORS PROTESTED

COUNT YASUYA UCHIDA

Rumor, gaining weight like a snowball rolling downhill, to the effect that the United States was peeling off its coat preparatory to making an assault on the Empire of the Rising Sun, was responsible for the visit of Ambassador Joseph C. Grew to the Japanese Foreign Office recently.

The storm began when a Japanese newspaper saw a sinister motive in the taking of pictures in Tokyo by the branch of the National City Bank of New York. These pictures, said the junker sheet, were intended for use by the United States military authorities. Other papers took up the cry, and very soon the Japanese people were being regaled with sensational stories of the activities of "American spies in the island Empire."

Ironically enough, the pictures that caused all the furor were intended for promotion matter, illustrating business and industrial development in the Far East—in fact to boost Japan commercially. When Ambassador Grew called upon Foreign Minister Yasuya Uchida and requested that the Japanese Government issue a statement repudiating the charges of the press, he was informed that the newspaper accounts were unfair, baseless and due to the overzeal of the younger officers of the gendarmierie. But Japanese officials naively confessed that they were "finding it difficult to get the press to print a true version of the matter." All of which does not help American business in Japan, for, despite official denial, the junker press persists in its fantastic charges and is calling for a boycott of American banks.

The recent carloadings, the editorial said, "reveal a substantially larger than normal seasonal increase."

said the wet-dry issue was not paramount. He declared he favored immediate, full payment of the bonus to soldiers "whether or not it brings inflation." Gleason after the meeting adjourned declared he thought other countries, notably England, had profited by slight inflation of their currency.

J. W. Maloney, democratic nominee for state treasurer, said he was certain eastern Oregon was going strongly democratic. He said he hoped for election this fall and would be pleased after January 1, 1933, to take up his residence in Salem.

Says Van Winkle Regime Inefficient

Alfred P. Dobson, the party's candidate for attorney general, scored Attorney General VanWinkle's conduct of the office as expensive and inefficient. He said costs had nearly doubled in the last 12 years while a large amount of state legal work is now being handled by separately paid deputy attorneys in the highway and industrial accident departments. Dobson scored VanWinkle's travel expenses, saying he had paid from $5 to $12 a day for hotel expenses and as high as $2 for meals.

Harvey G. Starkweather, congressional candidate, yielded to other speakers but concluded the meeting with a few remarks. He outlined the national principles being supported by the democratic party.

John Marshall, county central committee chairman, and B. S. Martin, secretary of the democracy here, presided.

Half of the moneys raised in the county will be kept here, Marshall was informed. Martin said a personal campaign will be conducted among the 7000 registered democrats in the county. Lists of these have been prepared for the use of each precinct committee-man. A 50 per cent vote was cast in the primaries, Martin reported.

And We'd Say This Was Not a 'Fluke' For the Hoppicker

INDEPENDENCE, Sept. 16—Hop pickers who had not yet moved on, created a scene of interest at the McLaughlin hop yard Thursday. Hop picking finished the early part of the week, but some of the campers had not seen fit to leave Independence.

Ely Fluke had turned a group of turkeys in one of the fields on the McLaughlin farm to eat up the grass-hoppers. They had been there but a short time when one of the campers notified Mrs. Fluke that a man had killed one of her turkeys.

Mrs. Fluke went to the man's cabin and demanded the turkey. He gave it up after she threatened to get her husband. The man immediately left the camp.

Mrs. Fluke cleaned and dressed the turkey and put it in cold storage for future use.

MALARIA PARASITE DISCOVERER DIES

LONDON, Sept. 16—(AP)—Sir Ronald Ross, whose discovery that the anopheles mosquito carries the malaria parasite was responsible for controlling one of the world's most terrible scourges, died today at the age of 75.

For the last five years he was partly paralyzed, and for many weeks he had been critically ill. He died at the Ross Institute and hospital for tropical diseases, of which he was director in chief.

At one time the conqueror of malaria was in straightened circumstances and in 1929 a fund was started by public subscription to care for him in his old age. The fund, totaling $75,000, was completed only two days ago. It probably will go to his institute. His wife died in 1931.

Winkle Calm Settles Over Independence

INDEPENDENCE Sept. 16.—With hop picking nearly over, Independence appears as a deserted village. Picking will be finished in all the yards by Saturday and most of it is over now. Nearly 6000 pickers were in town this year, and the large crews necessarily shortened the picking period.

Estimates of the hop crops in early summer were found to be far too high. Most of the growers found that their crops fell considerably below the estimate. Baling will be over the early part of next week.
