Somehow the World Series baseball games and the football season has sneaked up on the public this year. The first state fair will be in session, but what a break next Wednesday. Not only does the World series open, but the state fair will be in progress, and Salem day at that, and an important meeting of the state highway commission will be held in Portland.

It looks like the end of the state fair bull fights, with the governor frowning upon the event at the fair if it "involves cruelty," or if it would "serve as an opening wedge for the objectionable features attached to bull fighting." Well, Max, that is pretty hard to get around. What's next?

In the meantime plans for the state fair are continuing and it appears to be the big event for the state next week. Outside of some football preliminary contests this weekend, the fair is scheduled to open next Monday.

Mrs. Helen Tyson, assistant secretary to Governor Julius L. Meier, is enjoying her vacation this week. She is reported somewhere in Canada or other northern parts. Miss Winifred Gramham, secretary to Superintendent of Schools C. A. Howard, is likewise on her vacation, but will perhaps be gone only a few days.

The reaction to Rufus C. Holman's failure to oust William Einzig as state purchasing agent appears to be favorable among most state employees and heads of institutions, who have found Bill very efficient and cooperative. In the meantime a check is being made as to why the state treasurer referred to his secretary as an American woman. Gosh, are there any aliens around the statehouse?

Here is a "Believe It Or Not" Usually frank letters addressed to Ripley reach him. Yesterday a letter reached Hal E. Hoss, secretary of state, addressed as follows: "All Horse, Salem." Hal doesn't know whether to feel proud or insulted. Anyway, Hal, people have your name down one way or another.

GOES UNDER KNIFE
HAYESVILLE, Sept. 20.—Mrs. Hans Paulson was taken to a Salem hospital and operated on for appendicitis Saturday.

MISS ELEANOR LEWIS, daughter of a Coos Bay pioneer and prominent citizen of Marshfield, started to work yesterday in the state board of higher education headquarters here. Miss Lewis won scholastic honors in high school and college and has many friends in this section.

Charles P. Pray, state superintendent of police, is not in his offices this week. Charlie is reported to have gone on his vacation, but where, none of the office staff appears to know. However, with the deer hunting season open it should not be so hard to guess. This is his first vacation since several months before he organized the state police system.

Tonight Franklin D. Roosevelt will be in Portland and quite a number of Salem people and state house officials plan to go there to hear him. Those who attended the national convention say Roosevelt has a fine personality and is a good speaker. And since he is one of two who have a chance to be president, he should be worth going to hear and see.

While Roosevelt is on the coast making political speeches and giving voters a first hand view, his running mate, J. N. Garner, is mourning the death of his mother, which occurred in Texas late yesterday. But the show must go on.

It is great to see A. H. Averill, dignified appearing insurance commissioner, walk along without his crutches. He just recently abandoned both of them after a long siege of suffering and manipulation with them. He had both legs broken some time ago when struck by a motorist at a street intersection here.

Travelers seeking signatures of governors are frequent visitors at the state capitol, but there was one yesterday whom the governor gave special attention. He was Charles Jacoby of New York, who, with his ten children, had traveled 28,000 miles, he said. The governor wrote him a nice letter.

The governor returned to Portland late yesterday after his first several days in the capitol in about two months. The governor appeared in excellent health on this trip and expects to be here every week from now on. During his visit this time he participated in several important political events of which you know.

Somehow the World Series baseball games and the football season has sneaked up on the public this year. The first state fair will be in session, but what a break next Wednesday. Not only does the World series open, but the state fair will be in progress, and Salem day at that, and an important meeting of the state highway commission will be held in Portland.

EASTERN HEIRS OF MOORES WIN CASE

Supreme Court Opinion in Support of Gale Hill Verdict Released

Property valued at $50,000 to $70,000 goes to three nieces of the late George J. Moore, who died in 1930, and his wife, who was murdered near Jefferson in 1906, under an opinion of the state supreme court handed down yesterday. Justice Harry Belt, writing the opinion affirmed the late Judge Gale S. Hill, who heard the case in lower court.

Grace Rebecca Taylor, Clara Holton Lewis and Alice Holton Duffy, all of whom live in the east, are to receive the property. Claims of John Edward Barry for all the property under a will executed by Moore in 1930, were disallowed by the higher court.

The court declared that the facts revealed by testimony and nearly 100 documents introduced in the lower court, were convincing evidence that Moore and his wife had agreed in 1906 to execute individual wills, mutually willing one another's property to the other, on the agreement that at the death of one, the other should inherit and upon the latter's death the three nieces of Mrs. Moore should inherit the residue of the property, share and share alike.

The opinion recites that inasmuch as such an agreement was made, Moore was precluded from making the will of 1930 a valid document. The opinion cites numerous evidence contained in letters from Moore to his nieces, of his wife to the nieces and of statements to friends, showing that Moore and his wife had a meeting of the minds regarding their property's disposition. The court points out that Moore, who removed as an old man from Marion county to Oregon City, had only known Barry for a few months, was not connected with him in business or in relationship.

Ennis D. Wait and others who were named beneficiaries of Moore in a will executed in October, 1930, after Moore had willed Barry his property in April, 1930, did not appear as appellants or respondents to the action in the supreme court. Judge Latourette in Clackamas county had first admitted the so-called "wait will" to probate but when Barry showed that it had been executed in 1927 and the date subsequently changed, the Clackamas county judge threw the wait will out of court and admitted the "Barry will." Subsequently the eastern nieces started their suit in Marion county.

Moore Distrustful Of Courts, Lawyers
The opinion of Justice Belt depicts the character of Moore: "As the result of the protection and blessings which a beneficent government bestowed upon him, he was able to accumulate considerable property, the opinion reads, 'yet we find him writing over and over that this is a rotten country from top to bottom. He had no confidence in courts or lawyers. He was miserly, self-centered and unscrupulous. He jugged his property to defeat his creditors and to avoid payment of court costs.'

Mrs. Moore was a frail, little woman, born in London, England. She had been crippled in her youth and was obliged to go about in a wheel chair. Serving and caring for her husband seemed to be her principal mission in life. Her sad life was murdered on her wedding anniversary, by having her throat cut, her skull crushed. The murderer was never apprehended.

"It is beyond cavil that Mr. Moore and his wife had knowledge of each other's wills and that the naming of the three plaintiffs as the ultimate beneficiaries was the result of their common understanding purpose."
